THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
AN IMPRESSION<sup>1</sup>

BY RAMÓN JAÉN

TRANSLATED FROM THE SPANISH BY GEORGE M. RUSSELL, 1ST LIEUTENANT, CAVALRY, U. S. A.

THE best libraries are, of course, those that contain the most and the best books. But, for a public library, this is not the only consideration. It is not sufficient that there should be books by the thousands, well arranged and at the disposal of such as may wish to read them. Something else is necessary, something difficult to define but, nevertheless, indispensable.

It is difficult to study in a public library. Sometimes, it is as if an invisible hand took us by the shoulders, sat us down violently in a chair, beside a table, and gave us to understand that to allow us to read a book which does not belong to us is a distinct favor. In such circumstances, we cannot concentrate, we are offended at the atmosphere and it is only after having lost much time that we are able to feel isolated in the midst of the people, and lost in our own thoughts. At times, the atmosphere of a library is such that we are mortified to the point of never returning.

Before becoming acquainted with the great Central Library of New York, I would pass back and forth outside, in front of its four magnificent façades, admiring its beautiful fabric of pale stone. And I would think: A public library in the absolute center of this enormous city, seething with multiple activities! And I did not dare to enter. I felt the necessity of knowing the Library, but the thought that it might be like so many others kept me aloof, preferring my doubts to whatever the truth might be. I understood the absurdity of this attitude, but such was my state of mind for some time. . . . There came a day, as was bound to happen, when, without thinking, I found myself inside. I realized where I was by the sensation of having passed violently, in an instant, from an agitated, noisy, deafening activity to a silence that appeared to me absolute. I was in the vestibule of the great Library. I felt a little embarrassed. Why should it be so distressing to enter, for the first time, a museum, a university or a library? When we are obliged to ask for things, we feel almost ashamed and, if we make a mistake, oh! then our souls pass through the suffering of a small tragedy.

People were walking about everywhere, quietly, confidently, naturally. This was reassuring. I would be one of many. Why ask for information? I would observe.

Thus thinking, I entered a large room, in which were displayed beautiful books illuminated centuries ago, with characters carefully traced on fantastically water-marked paper. With the show-cases, alternated tall frames for the display, protected by glass, of a collection of embroidery of various peoples: for the most part, these are standardized to show the different conceptions of letters. There was a sample for almost every country in the world. There was one for Spain. I recognized it at once: bastard script alternating with "tejidillos" and drawn-work. How proud the good women of Lagartera and El Torrico would have been to see their labors so justly appreciated!

In another large hall, an enormous one in fact, full of high tables, as though arranged for working while standing up, preoccupied people were coming and going, were thumbing the index-cards or poring over them with fixed attention, were writing, were tearing up what they had written, were looking again and then writing again, and finally going away. Not a one of them seemed at all disturbed by the proximity of the others, and all moved about in perfect liberty. This was the Catalogue Room. Before those millions of little cards, arranged by authors and also by subjects, the people were taking their notes: they were there, offering themselves the works of the entire Library, all, — no secrets nor anything hidden from them, — rare editions at their disposal as well as recent books. To succeed in getting any book whatever, very little indeed is necessary, — the will to read it. I looked for a favorite author and, seeking, seeking, I found the title of a work the existence of which was unknown to me and which supplied a want that I had felt on a certain occasion. This find I undoubtedly owe to the broad ideal, manifest in this building, of supplying every want. I asked for my book and, in five minutes, I held it in my hands. But, this first time, I could not concentrate my attention, I was distracted by everything: the place, the light, the people, the silence, the millions of volumes disposed in such a manner that they can be consulted without having to ask anyone for them, in open book-shelves. I began to see clearly the spirit of the Library and, the more I saw of that spirit, the more I felt growing in me the necessity of coming to it frequently, daily, in order to enjoy its treasure. Ah! how admirably is its great variety of wealth arranged for awakening noble interests! Everything is a temptation to work. Books are not sufficient in themselves. The essential thing is to know how to give the people an impulse towards them, to move them by the power of suggestion, to flatter them in their predilections. In The New York Public Library, they possess the secret.

Having observed this, I felt myself pervaded by a great tranquillity. And now everything is familiar to me, because it all tends towards adapting itself to one's needs. I feel as much at home there as in my own house.

Once more in Spain: now it is the Alcázar of Segovia, an admirable etching by Haig, full of sincerity: the old castle, with its slender, sharp-pointed towers, rising on an efflorescence of stone from the dead level of the Castilian plain: the Eresma flows at its feet, reflecting the elms of its banks. This picture is in one of the three rooms devoted to the collection of bindings, engravings and paintings, a delicious place where the tired reader finds grateful calm.

Later, I visited one by one the various sections: Art, Manuscripts, Public Documents, Technology, History, Maps, Music, Genealogy, Current Periodicals, Newspapers, etc., etc., silent, comfortable rooms, in which, besides meditation and books, the reader always finds a friend who advises him and amiably orients him in his work.

For the blind, there is a library with upwards of four thousand volumes, more than half of which circulate monthly. There is something of tragic poetry in this room. The silence there is more profound than in any other, its aspect more severe. On the shelves, there are thick, grey volumes and, on the tables, vases of fragrant flowers. We see a young man, with quenched pupils, lofty of brow, his head thrown back, his eyes to Heaven, as if he hoped for the light. He is passing his slender hands feverishly, as though wishing to search the very depths of the ideas, over raised letters that are telling him of the deep, bitter sorrows of King Lear.

The children also have a place in this great house, and a very attractive one it is, in two small, low-ceiled rooms, gay with windows extending to the floor, through which enter the branches of some acacias. Along the walls, there runs, after the manner of wainscoting, book-shelves of scant height. They are full of books in a thousand colors. On the walls are pretty landscapes and marines in water-colors; on the tops of the book-cases and on the tables, flowers in the tasteful disposition of which are seen the hand and care of those young ladies who, full of tenderness, bend constantly over the children to find out their desires. They give the little ones the books they ask for or they divine the books that will please them. Notwithstanding the silence, there dominates, in these rooms, a vibrant juvenile gaiety. In a corner, surrounding a little girl, who, though not the oldest, is the one with the most personality, many children, some on their knees, some sitting down, most of them standing, are turning the pages of a large book in which pictures tell the amusing story of an indolent child. In another place two or three are reading stories. Another child, a little older, is looking at the index-cards. The surroundings continually keep before the children ideas of industry.

On leaving the Children's Room, on my way to the street, I became aware of a buzzing sound near me. It came from the Circulation Room. I went in. Surely it would be difficult to find in the libraries of the whole world anything of like nature. It is truly unique. This room is not so very spacious, which fact facilitates a comprehensive view of a most picturesque sight. Much of the soul of this complex city of New York is reflected here. Oh! if I could only give you an exact description! The people enter by platoons. At first I doubted whether the room would hold them all; but later I assured myself that it was possible, because I saw just as many coming out. And this is continuous; there is a new supply of readers every moment. Some come to return books, others to take them out, the minority to read. . . . There are no tables nor room for them, and furthermore, the readers do not need any. Sometimes, I have seen the room full of people reading and the two little tables deserted as though scorned. Some seats, a few armchairs, some benches around the columns, constitute all the furniture, and even that is superfluous. Generally, the people read standing up, — impatience keeps them from sitting down: many take refuge in a corner and, leaning against the wall, devour detective stories or Mark Twain; others stay in the very place where they got the book and consult their watches every second; a very few seat themselves comfortably. In general, they fear to give the body such a treat, so much are they pressed for time. Suddenly, someone arrives in a great hurry: he looks at one book-case, then at another and another, until he finds a thick volume, which he opens rapidly, turns over the pages, takes out a piece of paper, makes a note, leaves the book on a chair, and goes out on a run. He has come to consult a lightning calculator.

As you see, what dominates in this Library is not the Book, but Time.

And, in the midst of this feverish unrest, standing behind a table, pretty golden-haired girls arrange the books returned, note down the requests, prepare the cards, and answer a thousand questions, always smiling, expressing by their solicitude the hospitable character of The New York Public Library.

THE STAUFFER COLLECTION

THE most noteworthy gift of the month, in the Prints Division, came from the estate of the late David McNeely Stauffer. It consists of approximately 14,000 prints, comprising the greater part of the collection formed by Mr. Stauffer. Fully a third of the number consists of American engravings, which formed this collector's specialty. To this he devoted much study and research, which found public expression in his notable work on "American Engravers upon Copper and Steel," a "monumental work of painstaking care," issued in two volumes by the Grolier Club in 1907. The present collection of prints therefore forms a series of graphic illustrations for a large part of that valuable book, and is thus of obvious interest and value as a record of the development of engraving on metal in the United States.

It is intended to bring out important details later, in more extended notice in the Bulletin, and to display a selection of the prints in our galleries. Meanwhile, the present notice calls attention to the fact that a large part of this important collection has passed into the possession of the Library.

NEWS OF THE MONTH

GIFTS

THE following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of the gifts received by the Library during the month of December: From Mr. William K. Bixby of St. Louis, copies of five privately printed reproductions of original manuscripts owned by him, each copy being No. 107 of 200 copies printed, as follows: "Stonewall Jackson's way," by J. W. Palmer; "Holograph letter of Charles I" (formerly in the possession of John Evelyn and later in the collection of Wm. Upcott); "Laurence Sterne's letter to the Rev. Mr. Blake"; "Some Edgar Allen Poe letters"; "Marshal Grouchy's own account of the battle of Waterloo"; all printed at St. Louis, 1915.

The British Museum presented a collection of its catalogues, mainly of drawings, sculptures, engraved gems, medals, etc., of various periods and countries, in the collections of the British Museum; 8 volumes and 4 portfolios in all.

From Dr. Ramón Jaén, of the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., came four children's books by Spanish authors, published at Madrid.

Mr. Harlan Moore of New York gave a bill of sale, dated New Orleans, La., Jan. 24, 1855, by which two slaves were sold for the sum of Nineteen hundred fifty dollars to Col. Edward Moore, a Southern sugar-planter, by Thos. J. Frisby.

From Mr. J. P. Morgan, the Library received a copy (No. 36 of 45 copies printed on hand-made paper) of the "Catalogue of the collection of watches; the property of J. Pierpont Morgan; compiled at his request by G. C. Williamson, Litt. D.," London, privately printed, 1912.

From Mr. H. von Noszky, Melrose, Florida, came a collection of 28 manuscript letters, and 8 diplomas, cards, and broadsides; also 1 pamphlet. Among the letters is one signed by King Frederick Christian of Denmark.

From Mrs. E. Rutherford Stuyvesant, Allamuchy, N. J., came a copy of "The collection of arms and armor of Rutherford Stuyvesant, 1843-1909," by Bashford Dean, privately printed, 1914.

From Mr. Edward Tuck, we received a copy of "Some works of art belonging to Edward Tuck in Paris," privately printed, London, 1910.

The following authors presented the Library with copies of their works: Mr. Alexander S. Bacon of New York; Mr. Eustace Hale Ball (Capt. Harry Hale) of New York (5 juvenile books); Sir Lauder Brunton of London; Mr. Peter H. Goldsmith of New York; Prof. Julius F. Hecker of New York; Hon. Myron T. Herrick of Cleveland; Mr. H. C. Levis of London; Prof. John Bassett Moore of New York (11 pamphlets); Rev. John P. Peters of New York; Mr. George Raffalovich of New York; Miss Kate Sanborn of Metcalf, Mass.; Mr. Charles Truitt of Brooklyn; Mr. John Curtis Underwood of New York (30 copies of "Processionals"); Mr. Emile Waxweiler of New York; and Sir Lauder Brunton of London.

Additions to our collection of genealogical works were received from Miss J. Cary of Cincinnati; Mr. Marshall DeLancey Haywood of Raleigh, N. C.; Mrs. Delancey Nicoll of New York; Mr. Lawrence Park of Groton, Mass.; the Reynolds Family Association, Roslyn, Pa.; Mrs. Ira Otis Thompson of Lima, N. Y.; and Mrs. W. J. Young of Clinton, Ia.

Miscellaneous works were received from the following: From Major John Bigelow of Highland Falls, N. Y., 12 volumes of New York State documents; from Mr. G. E. Caumont of New York, 17 volumes of reports, French fiction, etc.; from Mr. Harris D. Colt of New York, 8 etchings of New York City views, published by the Society of Iconophiles; from Mr. Henry F. DePuy of New York, 1 bound pamphlet, "The second part of the tragedy of Amboyna or, A true relation of a most bloody, treacherous and cruel design of the Dutch in New Netherland in America for the total ruining and murdering of the English Colonies in New England" (first printed at London, 1653, and reprinted at New York, 1915); from Mr. George B. Dorr of Boston, a facsimile, reproduced by photographic process, of "Commissions du Roy & Monseigneur l'Admiral, au sieur de Monts, pour l'habitation és terres de Lacadie, Canada, & autres endroits en la nouvelle France," Paris, 1605, (No. 97 of 125 copies, 1915); from the John Rylands Library, Manchester, England, catalogues of its collections of woodcuts of the 15th century, Sumerian tablets from Umma, and Greek papyri, — in all, 1 volume, 1 pamphlet, and 1 portfolio; from Mr. B. V. Kissam of New York, 59 volumes of novels, essays, etc.; from Mr. Frederick H. Meserve of New York, a copy of his privately printed work, "Historical portraits and Lincolniana; index of a part of the collection of Americana of Frederick Hill Meserve," and photographs of Nathaniel Hawthorne and Oliver Wendell Holmes from original negatives; from Mr. Morton Prince of Boston, 5 pamphlets; from the Red "D" Line, New York, 31 volumes and 1 pamphlet, all South American public documents; from Mrs. Whitelaw Reid of New York, a collection of government documents, etc., in all, 885 volumes and 825 pamphlets; and from Mr. Louis Stoiber of New York, a copy of "The guide into the tongues. . . by the industrie, studie, labour, and at the charges of John Minsheu, London, 1617."

In the Bulletin for December, 1915, space was lacking to mention more than a very few of the important gifts received by the Library during November. It should be added that from Mr. William Woodward of New York came a copy of "The Jonny Cake papers of 'Shepherd Tom' together with reminiscences of Narragansett schools of former days" by Thomas Robinson Hazard, with a biographical sketch and notes by Rowland Gibson Hazard; printed for the subscribers, Boston, 1915.

The following authors gave the Library copies of their works: Dr. William Seaman Bainbridge of New York; Mr. John Armstrong Chaloner of Cobham, Va.; Mr. Howard M. Chapin of Providence, R. I.; Mr. L. Pierce Clark of New York; Mr. William E. Doster of Bethlehem, Pa.; Mr. Ford Madox Hueffer of London; Mr. Arthur Edwin Krows of New York; Messrs. F. W. T. Lange and W. T. Berry of London; Mr. Thomas H. M'Cann of Hoboken, N. J.; Mrs. Mathilde Nieberg-Wagner of Brooklyn; Mr. James Hosmer Penniman of Philadelphia; Mrs. Margaret Plunket Raper of Passaic.

N. J.; Mr. George E. Shea of New York; Dr. Willis G. Tucker of Albany, N. Y.; Mr. Charles M. Van Cleve of Brooklyn. Mr. Henry G. Bryant of Philadelphia; Mr. Granville Davisson Hall of Glencoe, Ill.; Miss Isabel F. Hapgood of New York (translation of "Taras Bulba" by Gogol); Mr. Henry Arthur Jones of London, England ("Dolly reforming herself; a comedy in four acts," privately printed, London, 1908); Mr. Thomas S. Jones, jr., of New York ("The rose-jar," Portland, Maine, 1915); Rev. M. D. Krmptic of Kansas City, Kan.; Dr. William Cabell Rives of Washington, D. C.; Miss Lona Ingham Robinson of Glendale, Cal.; M. François Rouayrenc of Paris; Mr. Porter E. Sargent of Boston; Mr. Evan Evans Smith of Owenton, Ky.; Mr. John Troland of New York; Judge D. Gardiner Tyler of Williamsburg, Va.; and Mr. Harold G. Villard of New York.

Additions to our collection of genealogical works were received from the following donors: Mrs. Ermina Newton Leonard of De Pere, Wis.; Mr. Daniel Langdon Tappan of Arlington, Mass.; and Mr. Harold Vizard of New York.

Interesting collections of official publications have been received from the Commissions of the following governments, in connection with their exhibits at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition: Bolivia, Canada, Denmark, Italy, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal and Uruguay.

ADDITIONS AND USE OF LIBRARY DURING DECEMBER, 1915

DURING the month of December, 1915, there were received at the Library 18,194 volumes and 4,912 pamphlets. (These figures include the additions to both Reference and Circulation Departments.) The total number of readers in the Central Building was 71,562. They consulted 191,555 volumes. Visitors to the building numbered 215,848.

AMERICAN INTEROCEANIC CANALS

A LIST OF WORKS IN THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

COMPILED BY JOHN C. FRANK

This list does not include United States government publications, which, up to 1899, are covered by the Bibliography of United States public documents relating to interoceanic communication across Nicaragua, etc., issued by the office of the Superintendent of Documents, and reissued in 1900 as an appendix to the List of books and articles...relating to interoceanic canal and railway routes, by H. A. Morrison, Jr. For later government documents see the indexes to government publications. For the early diplomatic correspondence relating to canal projects see Index to United States documents relating to foreign affairs 1828-1861, by Adelaide R. Hasse, issued by the Carnegie Institution, 1914. The reader should consult, for British documents, the indexes to the Parliamentary Papers.

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Ackworth, A. T. The manufacture of roofing tiles. London: Maclaren & Sons, Ltd. [1915.] 146 p. illus. 12°. ("B. & P." handbooks. no. 2.) VEO

A comprehensive little book written in simple language. Follows the successive steps of manufacture from raw material to glazing, packing and storage.

Burrell, George A. Hazards in handling gasoline. Washington: Gov. Prtg. Off., 1915. 12 p. 8°. (United States.—Bureau of Mines. Technical papers. no. 127.) VHCA

Discussing the relation of properties of gasoline and gasoline vapor to inflammability, this concise pamphlet gives a list of the common hazards, with plain directions for handling, as well as information on the extinguishing of burning liquids.

"A recent tabulation by K. G. Martin of the Fire Prevention Bureau of New York City shows that during 1913, in the United States, 1,040 persons were burned to death and 3,120 persons injured (a weekly average of 20 persons killed and 60 injured) on account of gasoline fires."—page 5.

"A dangerous feature of gasoline vapor is that it may travel a considerable distance from the gasoline and there be ignited, the flash travelling back to the container of the liquid and causing a roaring fire in a few seconds."—page 11.

Calvert, Albert Frederick. Mineral resources of Minas Geraes (Brazil). London: E. & F. N. Spon, Ltd., 1915. xvi, 100 p., 3 maps, 2 plans, 44 pl. 8°. VHC

A summary of scattered information on the gold, manganese, platinum, diamond, and iron resources of this wonderful state. There are 125 plates of maps and photographs.

"We are afraid it is likely to be a considerable period before investors will have sufficient capital available to tackle the uninviting security offered in Brazil. They are much more likely to satisfy the demand for capital from countries which boast of a more stable government and more scrupulous officials. As regards the book before us, a considerable proportion of it is devoted to the iron-ore resources of Brazil. While this section of the volume contains no information which has not already been published in our columns, it summarises in an able manner the main features of the situation. The gold mining deposits are also dealt with pretty fully, but Mr. Calvert's book, it must be added, is not in the nature of comment, but merely records the observations and comments of others. From reading one or two paragraphs in the preface, which is the main comment which Mr. Calvert vouchsafes as to the possible future before the country, we gather that in his opinion Brazil offers a great field. We hope that this prophecy may prove true. In the meantime the work he has written is well worth reading, and the photographs—many of which are taken by Mr. William Jones, who reported on the Brazil iron district for Mr. John Hayes Hammond—give an excellent idea of the character of the country."—Iron & coal trades review, Sept. 24, 1915, p. 396.

Also reviewed in Mining & scientific press, Oct. 9, 1915, p. 573; also in Mining magazine, Nov., 1915, p. 290.

Fernald, Robert Heywood. Notes on the use of low-grade fuel in Europe. Washington: Gov. Prtg. Off., 1915. 37 p. illus. 8°. (United States.—Bureau of Mines. Technical papers. no. 123.) VHCA

With a desire of helping to prolong "the life of the nation's supply of high-grade fuel by lessening present wastes and by bringing about a wider utilization of fields now neglected," the author spent the greater part of the early summer of 1914 in Europe with the intention of obtaining definite first hand information concerning foreign methods for "the utilization of high ash coals; the use of wood refuse and other similar material; the recovery from fuel of by-products—ammonium sulphate, tar, pitch, etc.; the recent developments in the preparation and use of peat; the results of low-temperature distillation of fuels; the possibilities of the slugging type of gas producer; and the use of powdered fuel." Although the investigation was interrupted by the European war the information obtained serves to indicate the trend of European practice. A very suggestive document.

Fleming, John Ambrose. The wireless telegraphist's pocket-book of notes, formulae, and calculations. London: Wireless Press, Ltd., 1915. xii, 347 p. tables. 12°. TTF

A wealth of useful information condensed into a neat little volume by the well known author of The principles of electric wave telegraphy and telephony, and professor of electrical engineering in the University of London. Makes no pretense to be a complete treatise, but gives principles and mathematical groundwork for the practical calculations involved in a study of the subject. The chapter entitled Practical information for wireless operators contains the international and American codes, directions for the care of storage cells and of wireless apparatus in general, and has an excellent glossary of terms. Well supplied with tables.

"Although much has been written on wireless telegraphy, we know of no book that covers the same ground as the one before us. The author has collected all formulae likely to be of practical value in connection with wireless work... It will be seen that the book covers a wide field, and it is undoubtedly one of the most useful books on wireless work that have been published."—Engineer, Sept. 10, 1915, p. 248.

Also reviewed in Nautical magazine, Oct., 1915, p. 364.

Gates, Alice Jane. Catalogue of technical periodicals; libraries in the city of New York and vicinity. New York: Library Board of the United Engineering Societies, 1915. xvi, 110 p. 4°. Desk—Tech. Div.

A useful reference work listing material in the New York Public Library, Plainfield Public Library, and the libraries of Columbia University, Stevens Institute, Chemists' Club, Engineering Societies, and American Society of Civil Engineers.

Haddow, Andrew N. The design of drill jigs; a practical manual. Manchester: Em-

mott & Co., Ltd., 1915. 3 p.l., ix-xi, 96 p. diags., tables. 8°. (The "Mechanical world" series.) VFG

Originally published as a series of articles in the Mechanical world (England) and designed to meet the practical needs of engineers inexperienced in the designing of special tools and other appliances used in interchangeable manufactures. Excellent line drawings (for the most part undimensioned, however) are provided; also tables of Whitworth screw threads; of gauges, angles, tapers, spacing holes, etc.

"This little book is called by the author 'a practical manual,' and it well deserves the name. It is full of useful hints to the designer of jigs. Many of them are quite a simple nature, such as would be readily thought of independently by anyone after his first mistakes in overlooking them, but this book will save even the first mistake and, incidentally, much annoyance."—Canadian engineer, Sept. 30, 1915, p. 433.

Also reviewed in Shipbuilding & shipping record, July 8, 1915, p. 26.

Hamilton, Alice. Industrial poisons used in the rubber industry. Washington: Gov. Prtg. Off., 1915. 64 p. 8°. (United States. — Bureau of Labor Statistics. Bulletin. no. 179.) Economics Div.

An important public document by one of the best known authorities on occupational diseases. The investigation covered thirty-five rubber factories located in fifteen cities and towns in nine states. Dangerous chemicals used were found to be the lead salts, antimony pentasulphide, aniline oil, carbon disulphide, carbon tetrachloride, coal tar benzol, and various petroleum products, such as naphtha, benzine, etc. Comparatively few of the workers are, however, exposed to a harmful extent.

"It is possible so to equip and manage a rubber factory that exposure to these various industrial poisons may be reduced to an insignificant minimum or wholly eliminated. Relatively little, however, seems to have been done in this direction. Often the danger is not realized, so that even when the equipment of a factory permits a given process to be carried on safely, through ignorance or carelessness it may be performed in a fashion which makes it dangerous."—Page 12.

Jerie, Gottl. D., and K. ALBRECHT. Motoren. Göpel und Windmotoren, Wasserräder und Turbinen, Verbrennungsmotoren. Mit 771 Abbildungen im Texte und 23 photolithographischen Tafeln. Berlin C: W. & S. Loewenthal [1915]. 2 p.l., ii, 289 p., 23 pl. diags. 4°. VFM

The fifth volume (2d revised edition) of Uhländ's Handbuch für den praktischen Maschinenkonstrukteur. Describes, with considerable detail of illustration and calculation, important makes of apparatus. The twenty-three double page photolithographs are noteworthy.

Johnson, Valentine Edward. Modern inventions. London: T. C. & E. C. Jack, 1915. xiv, 319(1) p., 17 pl. illus. 8°. ("Romance of reality" series. [v.] 3.) V

For the reader who desires to inform himself in a general way on the development and principles of moving pictures, submarine boats, aeronautics, high-speed railways, sun motors, gyroscopes, wireless telegraphy and telephony, television, electro-culture of plants, radium, alcohol motors, and levitated railways. Simply and entertainingly written, with interesting illustrations. An excellent book for the inquiring boy.

drawing. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. [1915.] xii, 282 p., 2 diagr., 2 plans. f°. (Directly-useful technical series.) † MLW

"This treatise [written by the head of the Engineering Department, University of London] is unique, and the more one studies its pages the less is one able to understand how so splendidly produced a work, involving such labour in its preparation, can possibly be sold at the reasonable price placed upon it. . . . It covers completely all but freak lettering methods and should do a great deal to encourage neatness and proficiency in what is still a very important branch of the draughtman's art. . . .

"The plates here presented include alphabets suitable for mechanical, electrical, constructional and civil engineers, architects and architect decorators."—Electrical review, London, Sept. 3, 1915, p. 303.

Pearson, Joseph C., and W. H. SLIGH. An air analyser for determining the fineness of cement. Washington: Gov. Prtg. Off., 1915. 74 p. illus. 4°. (United States. — Bureau of Standards. Technologic papers. no. 48.) VBDA

This well illustrated government document of 74 pages describes the bureau's apparatus and the results of experiments. Also describes several standard analyzers.

"The analyzer has been developed with the particular purpose in view of determining the granulometric composition of very finely ground and air-separated cements to be used in a further investigation of the value of fine grinding, which is now under way. It is also adapted in its present form to comparisons of the products of different finishing mills and to the separation and grading of abrasives and other hard-grained materials. In view of the considerable variety of finely divided materials already tested with the analyzer, the apparatus promises to have a much broader field of usefulness than that for which it was originally designed."—Page 74.

Popplewell, William Charles. The elements of surveying and geodesy. London: Longmans, Green & Co., 1915. 3 p.l., ix-xi, 244 p. diagr., tables. illus. 8°. VDE

"This book deals with surveying and geodesy in a very comprehensive and concise manner and it can safely be recommended to students as one of the most useful works on surveying yet published. . . . The range of the book is so wide that few branches of the art of surveying are left untouched. . . . A list of examination questions, a bibliography of surveying works, traverse tables, logarithm and mathematical tables and a very useful index are given at the end of the book."—Surveyor, London, Nov. 19, 1915, p. 532.

Riemenschneider, Kurt, and E. WELTER. Elektrische Umformer ü. Gleichrichter; ihre Theorie und Betriebsverhältnisse. Wien: A. Hartleben, 1915. xv, 320 p. diagr., tables. illus. 8°. VGI

A well illustrated treatise of over three hundred pages based upon the authors' prize dissertation (1912-1913) in the Technical High School of Darmstadt. Theory and calculation of important makes of motor generators; rotary and cascade converters; and relay, electrolytic, and mercury rectifiers, omitting reference to wireless telegraphy and to measuring apparatus. Has a good bibliography.

Stock, Erich. Die Fabrikation der Öllacke und Siccative; Anleitung zur Herstellung sämtlicher Öllacke und Siccative, nebst einer Einführung in die Chemie und in die qualitative und quantitative chemische Analyse. Mit 16 Abbildungen. Für die Praxis bearbeitet und theoretisch erläutert von Erich Stock. Wien: A. Hartleben, 1915. viii, 356 p. diags., tables. illus.

12°. (A. Hartleben's chemisch-technische Bibliothek. [Bd. 355.] VOP)

Another of the well known Hartleben series. Based on articles by the author in the leading German periodicals devoted to the varnish and chemical industry. Part one, to which the greatest space is given, deals with the raw materials. Part two concerns the manufacture of varnish and dryers. Part three has to do with the chemistry of raw material and finished product and contains directions for equipping a laboratory. Drawings are mostly by the author.

Reviewed in Kunststoffe, Munich, July 15, 1915.

Thomas, Charles Mitchell. Compass surveying and the simplified calculation of farm areas. Wytheville, Va.: D. A. St. Clair Press, 1915. vi, 92 p., 2 tables. diagsr. 1. ed. 8°. VDE

"Engineering news confesses itself unable to judge whether the book will succeed in instructing the farmer; and, what is more, it does not believe in making every man his own surveyor or engineer. But the book recommends itself unreservedly to every college teacher of surveying as a helpful and suggestive contribution to the art of teaching the subject to unprepared minds. Beyond this, there is sound sense in the remark contained in an advertising circular that reached us with the book: 'If you happen not to be interested, give your boy or girl a chance; perhaps they can catch on to the calculation even quicker than you.' — Engineering news, Nov. 18, 1915, p. 983.

United States. — Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The pottery industry. Report on the cost of production in the earthenware and china industries of the United States, England, Germany, and Austria. Washington: Gov. Prtg. Off., 1915. 709 p. 8°. VNE

A significant government document of over 700 pages reporting the results of an investigation of the cost of production, profits of manufacture, wages and working hours, and other conditions of employment. The section concerning the United States describes with considerable detail the technology of the industry. Also shows that the potters of the United States are without adequate knowledge of the costs of production in their own country; that the lowest cost of production in any American pottery exceeds that of the highest cost of production in any European pottery; that many of the American potteries are poorly situated and that few of them have thoroughly modern equipment; that "there is a distinct need for more scientific methods of production, which can be brought about only by highly skilled instruction and more scientific research work. There are twenty-two technical schools in Germany and eight in Austria devoted to instruction in ceramics and the development of the pottery industry. . . In the pottery centers of the United States there are no such institutions."

ECONOMICS, SOCIOLOGY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

Cooley, Edwin G. Vocational education in Europe; report to the Commercial Club of Chicago. Chicago: Commercial Club of Chicago, 1912-15. 2 v. illus. 8°. SSM

Volume 1 represents the results of a year's study of vocational schools, principally in Germany, with three chapters on Austria and Switzerland. There are chapters on the school system of Germany, secondary technical schools, technical universities, and schools for various trades.

Agricultural schools of lower grade in Holland, Ireland, Denmark, and Germany are described in volume 2.

Espinas, Georges. La vie urbaine de Douai au moyen âge. Paris: Auguste Picard, 1913. 4 v. 8°. SER

Bibliography, v. 1, p. [xiii]-xliv.

An account of the political and economic life of the city from early times, but particularly from the 12th to the 15th centuries. Full description of city administration, police, property rights, civil and criminal law. Volume 2 is devoted to economic history, including money, taxes, prices, manufactures and industrial organization. Volumes 3 and 4 are composed of contemporary documents, maps and plates.

Franklin, Fabian. Cost of living. Garden City, N. Y.: Doubleday, Page & Co., 1915. vii, 162 p., 1 l. 12°. (The American books.) TFI

"No attempt has been made. . . to suggest any solution of the problem of the cost of living. It has been confined almost exclusively to the purpose of setting forth the principal elements that enter into the question." — p. 154.

Gowin, Enoch Burton. The executive and his control of men; a study in personal efficiency. New York: Macmillan Co., 1915. xv, 349 p. diagsr., tables. 12°. TM

Bibliographical foot-notes and "Readings" at end of chapters.

Based partly on statistics furnished by a number of executives. Discusses the qualifications of executives, the means by which they control others, and the limitations upon them.

A detailed statistical study is given in an appendix.

INTRODUCTION

THE quaint English of van der Kemp's Eulogy, and its intense patriotism are characteristic of the author. It was because of his activities as a patriot during the revolutionary upheaval in Holland that he was forced to flee to America, in 1788.

Francis Adrian van der Kemp was born in Holland in 1752, at Kampen in Overijssel, where his father's regiment was then garrisoned. As a young man he received the best university and military training of his day. His interests lay chiefly in the classics, oriental languages, metaphysics, political economy and canon law. He was associated with the wealthiest and most cultivated families in Holland. His influence as a clergyman he used to further the political reforms of his party, and his preaching and audacious pamphlet-writing caused his arrest, imprisonment, and finally his exile in America. But he brought letters to the leading men, and was, in consequence, well received. Two months after his arrival he was entertained at Mount Vernon by General and Mrs. Washington.

He adopted America and American institutions without reservation, though his command of the English language was always imperfect. As Adams afterward wrote of him "Had he been as great a master of our language as he was of his own, he would at this day have been one of the most conspicuous characters in the United States."

Yet even with this handicap, van der Kemp was appointed Assistant Justice of the Peace in 1794. This was at Oneida Lake, N. Y. The following year he was instrumental in organizing a Society of Agriculture and Natural History. In 1797, after enduring the hardships of frontier life, he settled at Oldenbarneveld, now Barneveld, N. Y., where he found a congenial group of Dutch exiles who, like himself, were among the most cultured of his countrymen. Here he devoted himself to agriculture, his wide correspondence, and his favorite studies. Several essays show the results of his researches. Late in life, Governor Clinton appointed him to translate the forty volumes of the Dutch manuscript records of the West India Company—a task which he completed some time before his death in 1829.

His eulogy on Washington was delivered at Oldenbarneveld, on February 22, 1800. The copy which is printed herewith is transcribed from the manuscript copy which belonged to Mrs. Washington. It is in the Martha Washington Collection of Washington Eulogies in The New York Public Library.

Another copy of the eulogy was sent by the author to Holland. There it was translated into Dutch and published in an octavo volume with the title "Lofrede op George Washington, te Oldenbarneveld, den 22sten van Sprokkelmaand 1800, in Oneida district, staat van New York, in de Engelsche taale uitgesproken, door Franc. Adr. van der Kemp. . . Te Amsterdam, by Gerrit Warnars, MDCCC." The preface is signed "J. Lublink, de jonge," and reads, according to the translation of Dr. L. Bendikson, "Not long ago I received from America a very nice letter from Citizen van der Kemp accompanying a manuscript in the English language containing his eulogy on the great Washington. Since I had had, up to that time, no relations with the author, his note came to me as a pleasant surprise. One of my friends to whom I showed the letter also felt such keen pleasure in it that we determined then and there to translate it into Dutch. And certainly there are abundant reasons to recommend such a publication. For, in this writing, we have the sketch of a distinguished founder of the liberties of a mighty people, from the pen of a person whose abilities and patriotism were already known before he made America his new Fatherland, and whose entire literary work is pervaded with the local color of the country in which he wrote. Perhaps it is not superfluous to remind the reader that when this eulogy was prepared and delivered the happy change in the French government could not have been known to the author, a fact which might have caused some change in the form and contents of parts of his address."

It is not known that an edition of the eulogy was published in America. There is a copy listed among van der Kemp's works "published in America," in the appendix to Helen L. Fairchild's "Francis Adrian van der Kemp. . . New York, 1903." It is said to be at the New York State Library, but this is evidently an error. According to Mr. J. I. Wyer, jr., Director of the New York State Library, the statement must refer to the copy of the Amsterdam edition listed in that library's catalogue of 1855, and destroyed in the fire of 1911.

The Martha Washington Collection of Washington Eulogies, in which the original manuscript of van der Kemp's eulogy was found, is a set of three volumes in a contemporary binding of full calf. It comprises thirty-four eulogies. The majority of these are copies presented to Mrs. Washington by the authors. One bears her own signature. Two of the volumes are octavo in size, and came to the Library from the Livermore sale of Nov. 23, 1894. The third, which contains the van der Kemp eulogy, is a quarto obtained from Mr. William Evarts Benjamin only a short time afterward.

A checklist has been compiled of Washington eulogies in The New York Public Library. This will be published in an early number of the Bulletin.

—MARGARET B. STILLWELL.

EULOGY OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

Americans! of what rank, sexe or residence you have crowded to this mournful auditory — beloved, respected Hearers!

Since four and twenty years we have seated us amongst the Nations of the earth, and ranged ourselves as a Republic in the list of the most Independent states, without having been blasted by ingratitude towards our benefactors; we have cleared our National fame entirely from that dangerous political rock: a Phenomenon! so seldom in private life, where the burthen of accumulated benefits to often indispose the obliged and hurries them precipitantly now to neglect them to whom they owed all their ease and prosperity, now to curse them, with a view to obliterate their services.

If private life is so frequently polluted by this hideous vice, why should we be surpris'd M. H!<sup>1</sup> that it had affected governments? here it is neither the place nor time to investigate, whether this noxious plant is rather of a Republican growth, or if it thrives as wel in a Royal soil.

What well disposed mind feels not itself inclined to boast of this singular privilege, which we enjoy yet as a People! what well-born heart glows not with the warmest grateful affection towards that Glorious Being, that allotted us a place amongst its millions!

“Yea Father! this was your benevolent pleasure, that “your name should be praised — should be glorified by “your children of this immense continent — that wisdom
“and virtue — Religion and Liberty — arts and sciences “should find an asylum in America, when all the “earth should corrupt their morals — forfeit your continued “blessings, and scorn your Parental tuition.

It would degrade the dignity of my subject, Respected Hearers! to solicit your benevolent ears: it would be needless to furrow your deep afflicted bosoms with sorrow — the naked unadorned truth will secure me your uninterrupted attention.

A superficial view — and what more Americans! can be desired in the country? can be adapted to my supposed Audience? a superficial view of history with a slight comparison of our Constitution shall discover to the unarmed eye the secret springs of this so widely different conduct.

An undivided or unequal — unbalanced power in the constituted Public authorities — the unrelenting animosities and insatiable ambition of Individuals, menacing and cajoling by turns, by turns artfully deceiving a wafer-

ing multitude, — always clandestinely nursed — some times openly fostered — in an urgent necessity publicly applauded by the same constituted authorities — to crush mutually one another, till they fall together the long devoted victims of their own Idol — with a Metropolis the centre of their moral and Political strenght, the receptacle of the idle — the vicious and the opulent — all these coöperated in the production of this humble monster.

The good and vaillant Ages of Sparta with Aristides and Phocion of Athens — the Conqueror of Illyricum, Camillus Rome's deliverer, and Manlius with others equally eminent were all exposed, for their reward, to the violent persecutions of their seduced Country-men, inveigled by Aristocratic or Democratical artifices and intrigues. So lost the virtuous Patron of this vilage his hoary head on a Stadholderian scaffold, when his masters could not defend their dutiful servant: so was that noble Pair of Brothers, after they had astonished Europe by their talents, and spread, by their prowess, terror and consternation in the heart of London's Inhabitants, dilacerated by an enraged rabble. So is the soil of Old-England crimsoned by the blood of its best Citisens before the great Revolution, and so a luxuriant part of Europe's Continent is yet tainted by a regular succession of Patriots massacred by Patriots.

You too Americans! you fought, you bled in your Country's cause — you saw — now and then — the mingled Limbs of your brethren — spread here and there — You saw your Cities destroy'd, your cottages in ashes — your wives and babe's flying before a presumtuous ennemy, elated by momentary successes: but our noblest Citisens were not — during a series of years — butchered by their fellow Citisens — to obtain their offices and enrich themselves with their spoils. America's rulers, choosen by Americans from the midst of their brethren, compelled to the highest stations against their wishes, laid the foundations of the most stupendous building of this earth and returned to the cares of their own families, the moment they could be replaced by others. In the days of trial and dangers the Americans rushed forward from their native homes, and sacrificed all their possessions, to prevent the payment of an unlawful triffle to Great Brittain. Liberty — Liberty was the rallying signal — no less than Independence the hidden aim of our most sanguine wishes, and its undaunted declaration, by which — to make use of the Emphatical words of Samuel Cooper in one day a People was born<sup>1</sup> the immortal bound of American union —

Mutual danger — general Interests were your powerful incentives. You proved by your transactions — that you merited to be free — you proved your conviction, that, without permanent Laws, and a due submission to them, no Liberty can be procured — preserved — no lasting general prosperity ensured without great partial sacrifices. You obey'd you commanded at your Country's call, and were impelled — encouraged — excelled in all this by our good and great Washington — Washington seemed your's, America's tutelary angel — alas! Washington is — no more.

Our Congress — our beloved President were not moved by the wish, to wipe away that ancient Republican blot, nor distrusted the sentiments of the People of America, when they consecrated this day for the remembrance of the good and great Washington, but they intended, as the organ of this new world, to evince mankind, to proclaim to the remotest posterity their own sense of Washington's all-transcendent Excellency. The civilised nations will stand amazed — stupefied at this our unexampled mourning on this doleful event; — a mourning not of Courtiers or magistrates not of military and civil officers, but of whole corporations — villages — towns — did I say — a mourning of corporations, villages and towns? a mourning of our principal cities of the individual states — of the millions of the united indivisible American People.

This wonder of Patriotism — this marvel of genuine Republican gratitude stand unrivalled in ancient in modern history: and even so unrivalled in glory — unrivalled in the love and esteem of his fellow Citizens stands the great, the good Washington.

Whose heart is this moment not bleeding — bleeding from grief at our loss — glowing with thank-fulness for the unaccountable blessings, bestowed on us by Providence through Washington. Whose bosoms do not heave, by the mingled sensations of piercing anguish and extatic pleasure alternately convulsed — compressed, in having been the fellow-Citizens — the associates in toils, in dangers — in hardships of every kind — the companions in the victory's in the triumphs of Washington! Citizens! represent you this moment your late President: Soldiers! Look on your late General — look, together, on Washington — if possible — unmoved — and then, nevertheless you will not blame my trembling emotions — kindled by the recollection of your Friend's your benefactor's — your Father's resemblance. I see Him — and these mine eyes have been fixed on his expressive eyes — this hand has pressed his nervous benevolent hand — when I was received under his hospitable roof — I see Him, in his unassumed original grandeur, and admire, his dignified Character.

Your attention is roused Fellow-Citizens! alas! was my oration adequate to the greatness of its subject! was I endowed with Lee's eloquence — could I borrow the tongue of Fisher Ames — how should I thunder in your ears Washington's achievements in war! I should delineate with their masterly pencil the outlines of our Hero's Political career, and embellish all with some exquisite decorations, mutuuated out of the domestic life of Mount-Vernon's Farmer:

But, how discordant M. H! are the woods with the purity of classical elegance! I must hew with an axe the requested resemblance, and shall consider myself fortunate, you indulgent, if you recognise in my rude strokes any likeness of your beloved Washington —

Washington's character was from his first entrance in public life through its whole course not only unimpeached but highly revered by all, who were admitted to his acquaintance. His active prudence was guided by his intrepid courage: — his vigilant mind, never appalled in the most distressing emergence, was always enliven'd by a manly devotion, and all these virtues, with a vivid sense of his own intrinsic value, were only equalled by his modesty. Remembering that he was a man, Washington made every reasonable allowance for the frailties of human nature, pardon'd its weaknesses, and pity'd her follies, as often they were not blackened by vices, or the Public welfare did not require the infliction of a severer punishment.

Many of you M. H! will recollect the French war so triumphantly terminated by Great-Brittain, supported by the strenght of infant-America; but few will be acquainted, how well our Washington — after Braddocks dismal defeat — then deserved of his country and merited a civic crown by saving his countrymen, when conquering was beyond mortal power; and yet before he had given undoubted proofs of his prudence and intrepidity in his executing an commission to Mr de St Pierre.<sup>1</sup>

No wonder that Washington — one of the foremost to oppose Great-Brittain's alarming demands — was wished for through this continent — from Georgia to the Main — as Chieftain in this perilous struggle. So eminent was the man of America's choice. His appointment to the commandment in chief diffused an universal joy amongst her friends, and was accepted as the Prognostic of sad reverses by her virulent foes.

Washington accepted this important trust with an unfeigned reluctance and executed this commission in the course of an eventful arduous war beyond the warmest wishes of his most confident Enthusiastic admirers on both Continents.

Washington's unbounded encomiums resounded through Great-Brittain, were re-echoëd there in both houses of Parliament, and — if possible — with yet louder shouts reverberated through Europe. The wise rivalled with the mighty to prove Him their attachment and esteem. Golden medals were offered by societies, as rewards, to celebrate the Illustrious Washington, and the most accomplished performances were universally believed, to undervalue the exalted merits of his country's Saviour: Europe's Princes paid their homage to his virtues, and its Kings were flatter'd in offering Him their presents; and, notwithstanding all this frank-incense was burned for Washington with a never heard profusion, He, nevertheless, was not intoxicated by its delightful fumes. America proclaimed her independence; Washington compelled the Nations of the earth to its open avowal.

Lett others enumerate his vaillant exploits — his mighty deeds in war, printed in your memory's with indelible characters, and so repeatedly narrated to your children, with an exulting joy, if you shared in the contest; I am staring at his ever memorable retreat after the cruel battle of Long-Island, and admire his vigilance, his circumspection — his order — his alertness in executing this masterpiece of military manoeuvres, without loosing one single man, though a victorious army reached their works and watched every motion. I am dazzled by his greatness, in seeing him checking a numerous army of the bravest troops of the European Continent, under distinguished gallant Generals, flushed by victory, animated by the plausible prospect of crushing the insurrection, in destroying Washington, with a hand-ful Continental troops — when I see him with this body of scarce two-thousand men defending his entrenchments inviolated, and — nearly exhausted by fatigue — sometimes without ammunition, cloaths or payment, fatiguing and harrassing a powerful ennemy by his rapid marches and impregnable positions — till he — reinforced again by Columbia's genuine sons — swept our soil clean from mercenary bands, and left to Great-Brittains wisdom the choice of our friendship or aversion.

It is impossible, to draw a just paralel between Washington and the most famous Heroës of ancient or modern History. They ought to be place'd in his situation — in his circumstances, and be surrounded with his difficulties and discouragements — with the same allurements of promoting their personal grandeur, and the same flattering prospects of success, and then our Washington shall remain alone conspicuous in the midst of them.

Confident of your adprobaton, i must try, to bear down the scales — for valuing their respective worth, yet lower in favour of our good and great countryman, Washington's disinterestedness was as eminent, as his other excellent qualities brilliant. He declined all pecuniary rewards whatsoëver, and never tried to fill clandestinely up their chasm with the spoils of our enemies, or forced contributions on his fellow-citizens, under pretext of an imperious necessity or Public good.

Washington warned the Americans — not as a triumphant Chief — whose petitions are commands — whose advices are polite requisitions, but as a private Citisen, against the threatening dangers, and suggested to their cool deliberations the only means to consolidate their union, to ensure their independence — liberty and prosperity for ever.

But we wrong this eminent man M.H! in considering him alone as a General. Washington's claims, as a statesman, on our on Posterity's respectful regard, are equally solid. We Americans, assent with all heart to this self-evident truth. Lett Foreigners — to appreciate the solidity of our judgment, consider maturely Washington's admonitions — when he divested himself of the supreme command — dijudicate our Constitution, as a part of his egregious workmanship, and scrutinise his letter to the Individual states, as President of the Convention, and none of them will longer hesitate to go over in the steps of Columbia's sons. A constitution is adopted, and Washington unanimously choosen President of the United States. Here once more this great and good man sacrifices the delights of his retirement to the toils of a laborious life, for the benefit of his Country — with the same inimitable disinterestedness. What a large — what an immense field of glory for him, of stupefying amazement for us see I here opening!

The sight of the General in his brightest glory is lost in the radiancy of this new Politic Luminary. Mine eyes are weakening — bedimmed — bedewed, but my heart in the same moment joyfully expanded by its benign all vivifying influence.

Our union is now consolidated — our jarring interests amalgamed — private feuds and animosities between individual states and persons silenced, and led to coöperate to the common welfare by this all-powerful conductor. Our National credit is established — our agriculture improving, our commerce increasing with gigantic steps, the laws are invigorated — our liberty's and rights secured — the American name made respectable, and our National felicity and Independence established on a solid basis.

You cannot expect M.H! that I should detail the wise — firm and good administration of our great Washington. How should I — here in the western woods — nearly secluded from all intercourse with the political world, delineate with any exactness its contour? there few who have seen it — who have been favour'd with the execution of His plans, will be found adequate, to perform it with a becoming elegance. The consummate statesman must take his pencil to draw the President Washington; and then yet his heart must be as pure and good, or he will fail in his attempt, and deliver a shocking caricature in the place of a striking likeness.

Mourn not Americans — for this want of tribute to our all-accomplished Washington. Is it not consoling, that his greatness is beyond the conception of common mortals? Yes — so far beyond it, that it will over-awe the few, selected for this undertaking. Is it not more, that we actually enjoy'd the blessings, concomitant with such an administration — peace and prosperity and independence, where misery and blood-shed and slavery are the poor pittance of the European Nations? Is it not more, that the value of our Land — the produce of our industry — the worth of our Labor, that our population increased, where the fields — villages and cities of the vanquished and vanquishing Europeans are desolated — burnt — destroy'd? Is it not more, that our property, our lives are safe, our internal tranquillity undisturbed by our excellent constitution comprehending within it the principles for ulterior improvements?

Your impatient eyes M.H! seem yet unsatisfied importunately questioning to tell you more and more. Shall I repeat then, what you again and again instilled in the juvenile hearts of your listening children, how the great and good Washington, steering our Hülk of State on a boisterous sea — boisterous by Brittish and French hurricanes — and steered it save through the rocks of insolent threats and perfidious intrigues in the harbour of Neutrality? Must I recall to your mind that bold measure of our good and great Washington, when he, with an irresistible voice, proclaimed to Brittish arrogance and French petulancy, till here — and not farther or join with you our thanks with those of Both houses of Congress for this unexpected deliverance from the imminent horrors of a destructive war?

Must I recal to your memory's our mutual congratulations on that for ever memorable event, when we experienced our Washington equal in wisdom as in valour, equal firm and eminently great in the Cabinet as in the field; when our eyes — glistening with tears of inexpressible joy communicated to another the sympathising emotions our melted hearts, in discovering our incomparable Washington standing alone immoveable as a rock — assaulted by insulting menaces, by insidious flatteries of powerful Nations — by the odious insinuations of intriguing Individuals — foaming — at his feet — at his back their impotent rage — in vain assaulted in seeing him, superior to the most Idolised Popular Leaders, applauded by Americans — by Europeans — by the worthiest part of England and France?

No wonder! that the declaration of our beloved Washington, to resign the reins of our government, filled our breasts with sorrow. What well-born child could see himself bereaved from the tender cares of an adored Parent in the critical moment of surrounding danger, and feel not his bosom wringed with the torturing pangs of agony at such a final departure? Once united America prevailed, and — as it were compelled him by her most fervent entreaties, to continue, as Chief of this rising Empire, in his august station — once more America wished — but a vivid perception, of what she owed this incomparable man suffocated these wishes. His resolve was unshaken, and our gloomy silence evinced the excess in grief.

Here we see that great and good man indulging himself in the pursuit of his private happiness. Longing to enjoy — the residue of his days — the blessings of a Constitution what he had thought adapted to promote America's prosperity, Washington united his joyful acclamations in America's choice of his successor, and left us, anxious to enshroud our happiness — after he should be no more, a precious legacy to our aged — our adulted — our children — and their latest offspring.

There returns our beloved veteran — crowned with unrivalled glory — with the prayers with the blessings of millions for his guard to his delightful seat.

How extatic you stand gazing — my defective copy is beneath my sublime original. I wanted far more tender touches to draw you a resemblant picture of the domestic life of Mount-Vernon's Farmer. Sketching is all, what I presume, and this will evince you, that here too Washington was respectable.

His disposition was amiable — his appearance becoming a man of his rank and affluence — elegant his manners, his morals undefiled. His mansion was the abode of a benign hospitality, and a choosen circle of friends enhanced the value of a genteel and polite reception to an occasional guest.

A tender affectionate husband — an active and kind master he superintended with an uncommon vigilance his own affairs — bestowed on them his ocular inspection, and animated all by his example to order an undefatigable industry. His early hours were consecrated to agriculture and oeconomical occupations — after this morning excursion a part of his time was spent in his study and the rest of the day principally devoted to Society. So glided the one day after the other in peace and serenity for Mount-Vernon's Farmer — of all — who surrounded him — beloved — respected — venerated. So our Washington approached — with a resolved step — that awful term of all human grandeur — without longing at or fearing it, animated by the prospect of an immortal reward.

To this situation the shrieks of his barbarously provoked — insulted country pierced once more his ears. Washington participated now — for the first time with his fellow-Citizens — that joyful confidence, which is infused in the heart by a wise and firm administration. As well instructed to obey as to command Mount-Vernon's hoary farmer sallied forth with a juvenile alacrity to the defence of his country — accepted this new charge — exerted all his powers to re-organise our disbanded Veterans, paid, when he had attained the pinnacle of glory — his last tribute to humane nature, and left us his virtues for a pattern — America's gratitude for a spur. So I have shadowed the character of this eminent good man: It is you to give life and motion to mine unfinished picture.

Permit me Americans! to inculcate on this solemn day few hints in your hearts — to perpetuate to our latest posterity the blessings of civil and religious liberty — of our National Independence; So may the remembrance of Washington's death be as beneficial to us as his life and America's happiness a more illustrious Panegyric on his merits — than the most splendid trophies — than the Paeans of an enraptur'd creation.

As Washington stands alone distinguished amongst whatever was great and illustrious — so America stands incomparable — under the Civilised nations — with regard to its origin — incomparable with respect to its revolution and asserted Independence — incomparable in forming — adopting — and maintaining her constitution: In this particular unequalled yet upon earth — where our Dutch Brethren — after an eighty years war and various apoplectic convulsions struggled for, during more than two centuries, and struggled alas! in vain —

Free-men and many of them cruelly persecuted — Freemen! — Swedes — Dutch — Englishmen selected America for their asylum and enjoy'd here actually the rights and privileges, of which they were deprived in their mother-country's — living really under their own mild government — ruled by their brethren, obeying their own Laws, nominally subjected first to the Dutch next to Great-Brittain. —

A population encreasing beyond example — a flourishing agriculture — peace and plenty made then America already an enviable spot. The iron rod of a desolating despotism was never stretched over this country. Our civil and religious liberties were not wantonly assaulted — neither our swelling purses petulantly drained to fatten insolent Courtiers: no particular grievances nor private disappointed ambition lay here lurking in the darkness for its prey. The mass of the American People was not spurred by despair to throw a galling yoke from its shoulders. Neither of these most potent springs armed Columbia's sons. The Americans scorned to encourage the towering ambition of an all-domineering Empire by their tame submission to a trifling burthen; — they abhorred to destroy the British Liberty in the fields of America: — they manly struggled to defend — to maintain, not to recover, their rights and Liberties: they strove — what once must have happen'd by the nature of things — they strove, when the scabbard was thrown away — for their Independence, and here was Washington their guide.

Without Washington America would have prevailed at length and placed herself at the side of her proud Majestic Sister, to proclaim her own fame through the remotest regions of the earth. — but, with this Farmer to their Leader, she humbled Britannia, to acknowledge her Independency, and graciously received the offerings of Europe's continental powers — contending with another for a part in her favours. No bloody broils dishonoured the victory of America. Our Soil was not impregnated with the guilty blood of entreprising criminals nor our peace cimented with that of our Patriots. The disparity of sentiments however was indulged with an luxuriant animosity — to its utmost alarming pitch; and — nevertheless a Constitution was framed — adopted — organised — and inviolated preserved to the astonishment of both Hemispheres.

Obeys, thrice happy Inhabitants of this country! the call of Providence — chuusing America for a refuge to ruined — tottering — sinking Europe — obey the summons of Providence, and the death self<sup>1</sup> of our great and good Washington, shall afford mankind the most striking proof, that we are invincible — invincible in virtues — in our love of our Civil and Religious Liberty — of our government invincible — invincible in our union.

Can you not be Washington's — be Washingtonians — imitate his private his social virtues. Be temperant — frugal — industrious — tender loving affectionate Husbands: take care of your Family's, indulge your social feelings, promote your happiness — never injure others. Do well — if it were never recorded — do well — if you stood alone. Be obedient — active — good Citizens! obedient to the Laws — active — zealous in supporting the Government of your choice, and good in contributing your utmost exertions, to make its blessings hereditary to your children and grand-children. So shall we be happy in our Independence. So shall felicity — peace and plenty keep their constant abode. Self<sup>1</sup> in the western woods: — so will our latest Progeny continue to celebrate the virtues and sing the praises of our good and great Washington and the world will join in the Chorus WASHINGTON THE GREAT — WASHINGTON THE GOOD.

I finished.

A FOREWORD

TO THE LIST OF WORKS ON BUDDHISM

CERTAIN periods in the history of the world seem to be especially favored of Providence — periods of great uplifting in the spiritual life of man. Such a one was the sixth century before our era. It saw in Babylon the rise of the great unknown Hebrew Prophet, whose preachings have been preserved for us in the second half of the Book of Isaiah. It witnessed the birth and activity of the foremost teacher in China, Confucius. And in the same century the “Light of the World,” Buddha, appeared in India, and not only by his word but also by the example of his own life gave leading to such large portions of Asia.

In the year 568, Gautama the Buddha — “The Enlightened” — was born as the son of a petty chieftain on the borderland of Nepāl. The intense human interests that absorbed all his passion are seen clearly in his early life, when, for the benefit of others and for his own enlightenment, he sought a solution of the great mystery of the universe. For, while his thoughts gripped the whole of created things in their embrace, his heart never wandered far from his fellow-creatures, for whom he was seeking alleviation from pain, and right direction on the road to contentment. But, while he saw — as other such teachers have seen — that

“The hills are shadows, and they flow
From form to form, and nothing stands;
They melt like mists, the solid lands,
Like clouds they shape themselves and go.”

he went beyond them in making this thought the central one of his whole system. In the hands of another, a system built upon such a foundation might easily have issued into pure pessimism. But Buddha was seeking a way of life — not of death — of deliverance only from that which was worthless and temporary, and of direction towards that supreme knowledge which must be the end of all life. He found that deliverance in self-culture and self-discipline. He busied himself little with metaphysical speculations as to the origin of evil and of sorrow. What he desired was to make it possible for man to rise superior to the delusions and the desires that produced this evil and this sorrow. In order to do this, he worked out a set of principles, tending to govern the intercourse of man with his fellow, which is almost unique among the moral systems that have been placed before the world.

SEATED BUDDHA

A scholar of much repute sums up thus the demands made upon its devotees by primitive Buddhism: "Filial piety and respect towards teachers and those in authority; kindness and courtesy to dependants, tenderness and pity for the weak, hospitality and charity towards the stranger and the traveller, sympathy and consideration for all living creatures; truthfulness and honesty in word and deed; self-control, gratitude, fidelity, liberality and purity of heart; toleration for the beliefs of others, and avoidance of all hatred and uncharitableness in act, thought and language."

The Buddha, however — as has been the case with most moral teachers — was much too far in advance of his times. It is true that under King Aśoka (264–231 B. C.), his theories and his ideals made great progress in the valley of the Ganges. But they had to struggle against the Hinduism that was firmly entrenched by custom and early association; and with the help of the Muhammedan invasion of the twelfth century, Buddhist theories and practices disappeared almost entirely in India proper. However, Buddhism still retained its hold to the North and to the South, in the Himalaya mountains — the region made sacred by the Buddha's birth, and in Ceylon where it reigns supreme. In place of the lost territory in the Peninsular, it has substituted Thibet, Burma and Siam and has affected large districts in China and in Japan. Several hundred millions of human beings are today its devotees. The Buddhist scriptures — the canon of which was fixed in the third century B. C. — are thus found in four recensions — in Pali for Ceylon, Burma and Siam; in Sanskrit for Nepāl; in Tibetan and in Chinese. How far Buddhism had penetrated into Asia has been shown recently by the marvelous discoveries of Buddhist art in Turkestan and adjacent regions.

In still another manner Buddha and his doctrines suffered defeat; and that, all along the line. It is true that no moral system, no religious doctrine, no philosophic theory can remain for long as pure as it was at its source. Accretions from the outside are added to changes from within, so that its latter view is very different from its former aspect. But, nowhere has that change been more complete than it has in Buddhism. The Buddha had been cryptically silent in regard to the super-sensual side of faith. He had affected to ignore it as being in no connection with his own teachings, and as unnecessary to furnish the basis for his system of ethics. Yet, human nature refused to be cheated of its longings. It felt in Asia — as it has always felt — that the call to a moral life sounds hollow and vain unless it is fortified by some authority that is extra-, or rather, supra-human; and that, detached from connection with the general scheme of the universe, the aspirations of mankind cannot be held at the level at which the Buddha wished to keep them. What nearer and better course was there for his followers than to satisfy their cravings by turning the Buddha himself into a divinity? Gradually this belief made its way, and changed Buddhism from a code of ethics into a religious organization, with all the paraphernalia of dogma and of practice that are its inevitable accompaniment. More peculiar still, there grew up, not only a belief in the efficacy of Faith, but a confidence also that sinners may be saved by and through the Bodhisats — those who through life and devotion are on the road to Buddhahood. Such Bodhisats came to be looked upon as heavenly beings and as partaking “of the supercelestial nature of the Buddhas themselves.” What greater contrast than this can be imagined to the original teachings of the Buddha as regards the sole means of deliverance — mental training and self control?

The collection of works in the Library, of which the titles are given in the following list, touches upon every phase of this interesting development — the history of the Buddha, the inscriptions that make it possible for us to follow its early course, the archaeology, art and literature of its devotees and that peculiarly interesting question touching upon the relation of Christianity to this Indian system — whether both have a common origin or whether one has, consciously or unconsciously, influenced the other.

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

American silk journal, New York. A dictionary of silk terms, issued by the American silk journal. New York: Clifford & Lawton [cop. 1915]. 93 p. illus. 16°. VLN

An excellent little reference volume of nearly one hundred pages for the use of manufacturers, stylists, buyers, and salesmen. Briefly defines descriptive, commercial, and historical terms as related to every state of manufactured goods from the raw silk to the finished broad and narrow silks, including weaves, styles, patterns; woven, printed, and color effects, etc. Has names of brands registered in the Registered Trade Mark Bureau of the Silk Association of America.

Bailey, Benjamin Franklin. The principles of dynamo electric machinery. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1915. xv, 314 p. illus. 1. ed. 8°. VGC

A clear and concise treatise on the phenomena occurring in the different kinds of dynamo-electric machinery, designed for non-electric engineering students as well as a preliminary text book for those expecting to engage in electrical work. The practical problems at the end of each chapter and the sparing use of mathematical demonstrations make it a valuable introduction to the numerous more advanced works on this subject. The author is professor of electrical engineering in the University of Michigan.

Baker, George S. Ship form, resistance and screw propulsion. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1915. vi p., 1 l., 245 p., 1 l., 4 diags., 1 pl. 8°. VXH

Author, previously a member of the Royal Corps of Naval Constructors, is superintendent of the William Froude National Experiment Tank at Bushey.

"The book will be valuable for the way it coordinates the work of many investigators. It is sequentially arranged and has a good index; but it cannot be said to add much that is new to the similar works of Taylor, Biles, Peabody, and others which have appeared in recent years. The experimental tank method is, naturally, at the base of it, and Mr. Baker will probably have much to add to future issues as the work of the National Tank develops and is corroborated by that done in other tanks and by actual experience with full-sized ships."—Engineer, London, Aug. 20, 1915, p. 183.

"It is impossible to do more than indicate the general contents of this interesting and instructive volume. It covers a wide field, and a great deal has been presented in a book which is neither bulky nor unwieldy. The really valuable portion is that which deals with the forms of ships, as so much that is presented is the result of the author's personal research. The writing is concise and clear, and in that respect will be welcomed by those who have tackled volumes and papers dealing with the same subject which were very difficult to comprehend."—Shipbuilding and shipping record, London, July 15, 1915, p. 46.

Also reviewed in Nautical magazine, Sept., 1915, p. 266; Engineering, Nov. 5, 1915, p. 459.

Betts, H. S., and J. A. NEWLIN. Strength tests of structural timbers treated by commercial wood-preserving processes. Washington, 1915. 15 p. 8°. (United States.—Agriculture Department. Bulletin. no. 286.)

VEM p. box

"Presents the results of tests made by the Forest Service, in co-operation with the Illinois Central Railway and one eastern and two western wood-preserving companies, to determine how the strength of bridge stringers is affected by commercial creosote treatments." Concludes that timber may be very materially weakened by preservative processes, although creosote in itself does not appear to have that effect; also that a process which will seriously injure one timber may have little or no effect on the strength of another.

Burgess, G. K., and P. D. MERICA. An investigation of fusible tin boiler plugs. Washington, 1915. 37 p. illus. 8°. (United States.—Standards Bureau. Technologic paper. no. 53.) VBDA

Results of investigations made at United States Bureau of Standards from June, 1914 to March, 1915, to account for oxidation failures of plugs during service. Conclusion is drawn that the "dangerous" tin plugs contained impurities (especially lead and zinc), and that "the use of pure tin... would probably eliminate the danger." The report is well illustrated and gives copies of four typical specifications.

Burr, William Hubert. The elasticity and resistance of the materials of engineering. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1915. xix, 928 p., 1 plan, 10 pl. diags., tables. 7. ed., thoroughly rev. 8°. VEE

Seventh edition of this well known standard work by the professor of civil engineering in Columbia University.

"The present edition has been completely rewritten and re-arranged, much of the old matter has been displaced by new topics of greater present practical importance, and a new book has virtually been created... This classic work has long been regarded as the leading American authority in the field of the elasticity and resistance of materials. It is a source of gratification to the engineering profession that Prof. Burr has been willing to undertake the arduous task of revision, and has completed this work in so thorough and satisfactory a manner."—Engineering record, Jan. 1, 1916, p. 25.

Charnock, George Frederick. Mechanical technology; being a treatise on the materials and preparatory processes of the mechanical industries. London: Constable & Co., Ltd., 1915. x, 635 p., 4 diags., 1 table. illus. 8°. VBA

Designed for students and workers. A connected and systematic account of the chief operations underlying mechanical trades and handicrafts. Describes the production and properties of the various metals and alloys, timber, cement, abrasives, oils, and other materials; and tells about the details of foundry practice, such as moulding, forging, rolling, wire-drawing, tube manufacture, and the manipulation of sheet metal.

Crapper, Ellis H. Arithmetic of alternating currents, containing 50 worked examples and 182 exercises. London: Whittaker & Co., 1915. vii, 208 p. diags. 12°. VGI

"This little volume comprises an admirable selection of worked examples and graduated exercises (with answers) in various alternating-current exercises. Whilst it has, naturally, no particular "plot," the book is very well arranged and in every way up to the high standard we should expect from the author. It should meet fully the needs of those many students who desire guidance and material on which to practice in the way of numerical quantitative exercises. Alternating-current problems of every kind demand a good deal of mathematical working for their solution, and, though the mathematics required be comparatively simple, more practice is required to gain confidence and readiness in its application than can easily be provided for in a standard text-book on alternating-current theory. By preparing a treatise devoted specifically to the arithmetic of the subject, the author has earned the gratitude of what will, we are sure, be a very extensive circle of readers."—Electrical review, London, Oct. 1, 1915, p. 439.

Eley, Charles V. A. How to save a big ship from sinking, even though torpedoed. London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd. [1915.] xi, 195 p. diags., plans. 12°. VXHG

"I believe many vessels founder through having insufficient pumping machinery on board to deal with the incoming water due to the ship straining in a storm. In other cases I believe vessels founder through want of knowledge on the part of engineers, either through only having just joined their vessel, or through not having studied the question of balancing their vessel, and forming a proper course as to how to act in cases of emergency in the matter of closing or opening communicating doors of water tight compartments. In other cases, again, I believe vessels have been lost which had on board sufficient power in their auxiliary pumps to save the ship, but owing to the bad arrangement of same it was impossible for them to be used. I will deal with these matters more minutely in later chapters, and endeavour to state some actual cases.

"As a rule, however, the auxiliary pumps on a ship are not sufficient to deal with the incoming water caused by collision or torpedo, but require to be supplemented with a complete system of pumps capable of starting together at a moment's notice, whereby the whole of the forces existing in the ship for the purpose of propulsion could be utilized for expelling water from the vessel when open to the sea, or such part of these forces as any particular condition calls for."

Hamburg: Verlag für Kälte-Industrie, 1912-15. 3 p.l., 7-824 p. tables. illus. 5. ed., newly rev. 4°. VOI

The first edition of this noteworthy work was published in 1903. The fifth edition has over 800 pages and describes with some detail the most recent practice in the application of refrigerating processes in a large number of industries. The different systems of cold production are described by reference to the machinery of representative firms. There are also chapters on artificial ice making, the cooling of fluids and gases, and the problems of building. The work is comprehensive, practical, well illustrated, and provided with many reading references.

Grieves, Loren Chester. Military sketching and map reading for non-commissioned officers (illustrated). Washington: United States Infantry Association, 1915. 70 p., 2 pl. diags. illus. 4°. VWI

Thirty graded and well illustrated lessons intended to relieve organization commanders of devising a new course each year, to standardize instruction, and to furnish a basis for the prescribed tests by battalion commanders and inspectors. Author was engaged for some years on the progressive military map of the United States and the Philippine Islands, and has had considerable experience in teaching this subject to non-commissioned officers. One of the chapters tells how to make contour models.

Hamilton, Douglas Thomas. Shrapnel shell manufacture; a comprehensive treatise on the forging, machining, and heat-treatment of shells, and the manufacture of cartridge cases and fuses for shrapnel used in field and mountain artillery, giving complete direction for tool equipment and methods of setting up machines, together with government specifications for this class of munitions. New York: Industrial Press, 1915. 4 p.l., 296 p. illus. 8°. VWS designs are special in the sense that they are intended for producing some particular part, and, at first thought, it might seem useless to study the details of a die which in all probability will not exactly be duplicated within the experience of any one tool-maker or diemaker. It should be remembered, however, that the best way to obtain a broad, general knowledge of die construction is by studying as many different designs as possible in order to become familiar with those features which have proved successful in actual practice. Incidentally, many of the tools illustrated are ingenious types and represent, in a general way, what has been accomplished in the art of constructing dies."—From the preface.

Contains material originally published in Machinery, with other data obtained especially for the book. Has abstracts of specifications for Russian, British, and American shell bodies, fuses, and cartridge cases. Well illustrated by carefully prepared line drawings.

Kautny, Theo. Autogenous welding and cutting. Translated by the author and James F. Whiteford... New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1915. xiv, 157 p. diags. illus. 12°. VID

By a well-known authority — practical, simply written, and well illustrated, but confined almost wholly to the oxy-acetylene process. Tells how the gases are prepared and handled; describes the various types of burners; and has chapters on a large number of practical applications, as: the welding of the different kinds of iron, the manufacture and repair of boilers, the manufacture of cylindrical and rectangular vessels, large pipes and conduits, gas and water pipes, pipe-shaped apparatus, the welding of copper, aluminum, nickel, and other metals. (In this connection reference is made to the List of works on oxy-acetylene welding, published by the New York Public Library in 1914. Kingsbury, John Edward. The telephone and telephone exchanges; their invention and development. London: Longmans, Green, and Co., 1915. x, 558 p., 7 pl. diags. illus. 8°. TTH

Over 500 pages of entertaining and useful telephone history for the general reader as well as for the expert. Traces the development and describes the principal inventions, with their industrial results. Some of the information, which is from original records, is now published for the first time.

Kreisinger, Henry, and J. F. BARBLEY. Heat transmission through boiler tubes. Washington, 1915. 36 p. illus. 8°. (United States.—Mines Bureau. Technical paper. no. 114.) VHCA

The third publication of the Bureau of Mines on the subject of heat in boiler plants. Presents the results of a study of heat transmission through the metal of the heating plate, the temperatures of the surface of the plate being measured while the boiler was in operation.

"The results show that the temperature of the outside surface of the pipe is very nearly that of the steam in the pipe. There is no appreciable difference in the temperature of the outside surface whether the pipe is bare or covered with a 1-inch layer of magnesia pipe covering... From the preceding deductions it follows that in computing the heat losses through pipe coverings the resistance to the heat flow through the metal of the pipe can be dropped out of the problem and only the resistance of the covering material considered. That is, it is safe to assume the inside surface of the covering to be at the same temperature as the steam."

Although bristling with the melancholy facts of our present educational lack-of-system, this book is full of constructive, practical, and hopeful suggestions for something better. Mr. Lapp is a member of the National Commission on Vocational Education and Mr. Mote is the author of Industrial arbitration. There is an introduction by the Hon. William C. Redfield, secretary of commerce, an excellent bibliography, a list of organizations interested in the subject, and a remarkably complete index.

"Enough knowledge is already stored up to revolutionize the practical world if it could only be brought into action. Enough scientific knowledge of agriculture is in printed form to make two blades of grass grow where one grows now if it were effectively put to work; enough of industrial science has been accumulated to bring a new era of efficiency if a channel could be opened to conduct it to the right workers in the office and shop; enough science and art stand ready to improve the millions of homes in the land if the home-makers were given the opportunity to get, and were taught to practice, that part which is useful to them; and enough principles and facts of business are available for the business man to give a broader, more permanent and more efficient character if they can only be wrought in the right proportions, into the minds and actions of business men..."—p. 24.

"The ideal school system which brings all of the children and the whole of each child to school from six to fourteen; which provides for a complete system suitable to all whether they go into the ranks of a profession or a trade; which extends efficient education compulsorily to all youth who have gone to work until they are eighteen years of age; and which gives the opportunity for an effective continuation education to all persons throughout life, will assuredly give results which will be shown in personal efficiency and the character that goes with it; physical fitness with its promise for future generations; more efficient industry and agriculture with their results in national welfare; conservation of vital and natural resources; thrift in management of personal and public business; a stable social democracy in which all shall be equal in opportunity; and a culture which shall be a reality to all."—p. 378.

Mann, H. Leslie. A text-book on practical mathematics for advanced technical students. London: Longmans, Green & Co., 1915. xi, 487 p. 8°. OEF

Based upon senior work at the Woolwich Polytechnic and presupposes a preliminary knowledge of algebra, trigonometry, mensuration, and the use of logarithms and squared paper. Section one is designed to strengthen the student in algebra and trigonometry; section two is a somewhat elaborate treatment of the calculus; while section three consists of the applications of mathematics to those practical problems more or less familiar to the technical student. There are many problems—all with answers.

"The practicing engineer frequently meets a ready formula which he would like to deduce and check to satisfy himself of the validity of the assumptions on which the formula has been built and of the correctness of its derivation. In his scientific studies the engineer also encounters many an equation he would like to establish or to solve, and especially in analyzing the conditions of new problems he requires the concentration and definiteness of the mathematical symbol. He then is thrown back upon his old mathematical knowledge and not infrequently finds it rusty, and himself awkward in handling the old tools. In such times the engineer will be grateful to find at hand a work which in a short and concise manner presents methods of treating problems similar to his.

Mr. Mann's Practical mathematics is such a book. While the author calls it a textbook, it is by no means what the name implies. It does not teach mathematics; it rather presumes a knowledge of it. It does better; it reminds one of what he has forgotten. It consists practically of methods to solve problems in as few words as possible. The book has a thoroughly practical aspect, and it is evident that an experienced and practical mind has written it. The reader, or rather the user, of the book will be grateful to the author for its production." — Engineering news, Dec. 16, 1915, p. 1169.

"The most promising new insecticide developed during the course of the experimental work is arsenate of calcium. This arsenical may be manufactured at less cost than arsenate of lead or may be readily prepared at home as described on page 30. During the season of 1912 and 1913 arsenate of calcium gave encouraging results. In 1914 a commercial arsenate of calcium paste in combination with lime-sulphur gave very satisfactory control of the codling moth. While arsenate of calcium may have certain limitations, it will doubtless prove of value for the control of chewing insects on certain host plants." — p. 42-43.

Sibert, William Luther, and J. F. STEVENS. The construction of the Panama canal. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1915. x, 339 p., 16 pl. 8°. TSB

General Sibert was formerly a member of the Canal Commission, in charge of the construction of the Gatun locks and dam and of the channel from Gatun to the Atlantic ocean. Mr. Stevens was for some time the chief engineer of the whole enterprise. The book first touches briefly upon the personnel of the several commissions and on the condition of the work as left by the French. Then follow chapters on the preparatory period (1904-1907) concerning such subjects as the relative merits of a sea level and lock canal, the reconstruction of the Panama Railroad, the development of plans, housing and feeding of the force, and management. The second section deals with the technical side of actual construction.

"This book gives an excellent idea of the design and construction of the Panama canal, without going into wearisome details. It is intended for general reading rather than as a reference book for technical men. . . . Because of General Sibert's intimate connection with the work in the Atlantic division, the construction there is treated at somewhat greater length than that in Culebra cut and on the Pacific side. The general features, however, are stated with reference to all of the work. Passing incidents that have a human flavor are worked in particularly by General Sibert, making the volume even more readable than a mere recital of facts could make it." — Engineering record, New York, Jan. 1, 1916, p. 25.

The Soda Fountain. The dispenser's formulary or soda water guide. A practical handbook for soda fountain operators consisting of over 2,000 tested formulas for soda fountain products, with complete information on fountain service, fountain standards, ice cream standards and formulas, and luncheonette service, including an appendix of manufacturers' formulas, together with descriptive information of their fountain apparatus, sundries and supplies. Compiled by the editorial staff of the Soda Fountain. New York: D. O. Haynes & Co. [1915.] iii, (1)6-274 p. 3. ed., rev. and enl. 8°. VTP

Well arranged and practical. Gives estimates on the cost of apparatus and directions for maintenance, serving, and advertising; also official definitions of basic materials. Complete index covers a surprisingly large number of drinks, ice creams, ices, salads, sandwiches, pastry, etc.

Spofford, Charles Milton. The theory of structures. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1915. xv, 483 p. diagrs., tables. 2. ed., rev. and enl. 8°. VEC

The first edition of this well-known work by the professor of civil engineering in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology was published in 1911 and has since been used as a text-book in that institution. It is now revised and expanded by more than seventy pages. Aims "to present in a thorough and logical manner the fundamental theories upon which the design of engineering structures is based and to illustrate their application by numerous examples." Does not attempt to treat of the design of complete structures and is confined to statistically determined cases. There are many practical problems offered for solution.

Williams, Archibald. A book of the sea. London: T. Nelson and Sons [1915]. 476 p., 2 pl. 12°. VX

Everything that the general reader cares to know about the history and construction of ships. Interesting chapters on compass, navigation, beacons, light-houses, signals, life-boats, diving, salvage, whalers, sea water, tides and ocean currents, waves, ice fields and icebergs. Copiously illustrated. Colored frontispiece shows the funnel markings and house flags of the chief British and foreign lines.

Wilson, Winter Lincoln. Elements of railroad track and construction. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1915. vi, 396 p. diagrs., tables. illus. 2. ed., rev. and enl. 12°. TPD

A rewriting, enlargement, and rearrangement of this practical work originally published in 1908 by the professor of railroad engineering in Lehigh University. Presents fundamental principles of permanent way, turnouts, sidetracks, yards, signals, organization, subgrades, trestles, culverts and grades, "in such manner that the inexperienced engineering student can form a general idea."

The author argues that democratic movements have always required an organization, and that the organization has eventually become an end rather than a means. The referendum, syndicalism, and anarchism have all been attempts to check the tendency toward oligarchy. These attempts have failed because 1, organization is indispensable; 2, "it is an essential characteristic of all human aggregates to constitute cliques and sub-classes... The democratic currents of history resemble successive waves. They break over on the same shoal [oligarchy]... They end by fusing with the old dominant class; whereupon once more they are in their turn attacked by fresh opponents who appeal to the name of democracy. It is probable that this cruel game will continue to the end."

"This essay is intended to rouse understanding of the Flemish people, related to us, which... in the full consciousness of its immortal race has characterized itself so freely and strongly and compellingly in the works of its gifted artists as has hardly another people in the world." — Preface.

REPORT OF

The report of the Trustees in former years has been wisely confined to a brief mention of important events, referring for details to the accompanying report of the Director and the statements from other officers.

The history of the year 1915 has been almost devoid of striking events, a fact eloquent of the happiness and therefore of the success of the Library administration. The volume of work performed by the Library, and the number of those resorting to it for study or recreation, has continued to show a constant increase, until the use of its collections is two or three times that of any of the other great libraries of the world; the average number of readers being daily more than double the numbers of those using the British Museum of London or the Bibliothèque Nationale of Paris. The corresponding figures of the libraries in smaller cities of the United States are, of course, far below those of The New York Public Library.

The Library corporation in the month of May next will have reached the twenty-first anniversary of its incorporation and the fifth anniversary of its occupation of the Central Building — for the conception and planning of which we must always be so deeply indebted to John L. Cadwalader, our late President, and John S. Billings, our late Director. It may be of interest to attempt to indicate briefly by figures the extent to which the Library has grown in the past five years.

The number of visitors to the Astor and the Lenox libraries in 1910, has been multiplied more than tenfold in the number of visitors during the past year to our central library. The number of those who called for and consulted books in the reference reading rooms has grown from 232,506 to 827,644. The total number of books and pamphlets belonging to the corporation has increased by nearly half a million — or from 1,919,982 to 2,410,379 — of which a large proportion are now exposed on open shelves for the indiscriminate use of all visitors. The total number of employees of all classes has increased from 732 in 1910 to 1248 in 1915; that is, it has almost doubled.

All of this, it must be noted, has been accomplished without any corresponding increase in the invested funds of the corporation or in its income. For the first complete year of occupation of the Central Building, the expenditures of the Reference Department were $473,579.42, but these had increased in 1915 to $617,704.43, an increase of only 23.38 per cent. The expenditures of the Circulation Department increased still less — from $656,685.10 in 1910 to $806,026.42 — a growth of only 22.74 per cent. The income for circulation is almost entirely derived from an appropriation by the City.

We have been able to make our income and outgo balance, only by cutting down expenditures for books and binding, and by ruthlessly eliminating from our budget a variety of items for purposes which were strongly urged as desirable to enable us to deal more promptly and efficiently with the hundreds of thousands of readers whom we serve, and for whose convenience the Library exists.

The Library is therefore faced with the ungracious and difficult task of trying to provide adequately for the steadily increasing stream of readers and visitors, without an increase of income large enough to enable us to improve the accommodations we can offer to the public. The most serious aspect of the problem is the always threatening danger that we may lose members of our Staff whom it would be hard to replace. The salaries we are able to pay are small at best, and the temptation to highly trained and efficient members of our Staff to desert the service of the Library for better paid employment, is constant.

This condition of things can be cured only by a substantial increase of endowment. Our income, which is expended in full every year, is inelastic in the very nature of things, for the Library's varied services to the public are rendered without charge. Nor can the expenses of operation be materially reduced without impairing the efficiency of the work. The expenditures for new books have already been reduced to a point dangerously low; so that if we can find no means of increasing our income, we may be forced to reduce our expenditure, and therefore our services to the public, in ways that would be injurious and distasteful to our readers.

Among the more or less routine problems which have engaged the attention of the Trustees during the past twelve months, reference may be made to the question of the paper now used by newspapers. Experience has shown that many newspapers are printed on paper which in a very few years becomes so disintegrated that it is all but impossible to preserve them, even if they are little called for, and, therefore, remain for long periods quite undisturbed. They can be specially treated so as to avoid this difficulty, but the cost of so doing is prohibitive. An obvious remedy would be to induce the publishers to print, upon good rag paper, a small edition for the use of libraries or other purchasers who desire to preserve this form of literature; but we have not as yet been successful in inducing any of those who use a poor quality of paper, to adopt this method.

The continued existence of the Library School has been a topic of serious concern. The foundation of the School was made possible by the liberality of Mr. Andrew Carnegie, who promised a sum sufficient to maintain it for five years. Unfortunately, the term fixed by him has expired; but the contribution has been generously renewed for another year.

The Municipal Reference Library, maintained by us as a Branch, with the help of an annual appropriation from the City of New York, has continued to do a valuable and extensive work.

During the year 1915 the new building for the George Bruce Branch, which is intended to replace the old building in West 42nd Street, was put in successful operation. It is situated on Manhattan Avenue, near the junction with 126th Street. This makes in all forty-three Branches under our system, of which thirty-two are in the Borough of Manhattan, seven in The Bronx, and four in Richmond. By agreement with Mr. Carnegie, the necessary funds were secured to build a large and much needed addition to the Tremont Branch library at No. 1866 Washington Avenue, The Bronx, now one of the most largely used of any of our Branches, as will appear from the statistics annexed hereto.

We have received no gifts by bequest during the past year, but by the will of the late Amos F. Eno, who died in the autumn of 1915, the Library was bequeathed his collection of books, engravings and prints relating to the City of New York; and also the sum of $50,000. Unfortunately, the will has been contested by some of Mr. Eno's relatives, and the contest is still pending.

Dr. Saram R. Ellison presented to the Library the collection of works on "magic" known as the "Saram R. Ellison, M.D., Collection," together with funds for the purchase of additions to the collection. Mrs. Abraham Lansing, of Albany, has deposited with the Manuscript Division of the Library an important collection of manuscripts, containing the papers of Gen. Peter Gansevoort, Peter Gansevoort, Jr., and Abraham Yates, Jr. From the late Miss Ada Rehan we received, before her death, an interesting collection of extra-illustrated editions of Augustin Daly's revivals of Shakespeare's plays, and prompt books, playbills, and musical scores of Daly's Theatre productions. From Mr. Edward Walter West, of Brooklyn, came a collection of eighty-nine volumes, extra-illustrated with many rare plates, and beautifully bound in half and full morocco, with special tooling.

During the past year there have been the following changes in the membership of the Board of Trustees:

John W. Alexander, an eminent artist and a member of the Board since January 13, 1909, died at his home in this city on May 31, 1915. William Stewart Tod, a member of the Board since April 10, 1912, resigned as a Trustee on May 12, 1915.

This left three vacancies in the Board, and Hon. Elihu Root and Mr. Payne Whitney were elected Trustees on October 13, 1915, to fill two of the existing vacancies, thus leaving one vacancy at the close of the year.

We have also suffered the loss of the services of Mr. D. Phoenix Ingraham, a member of the Committee on Circulation, who died April 7, 1915.

The Trustees again express their appreciation of the excellent work of the Library Staff in all its branches, resulting in giving to the public a service of which the Trustees have just reason to be proud, and which they believe is also fully appreciated by the community.

LEGACIES TO THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

No precise words are necessary to a valid legacy to the Corporation. The following clause, however, may be suggested:

“I give The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations, the sum of.....dollars.”

If land, or any specific personal property, such as bonds, stocks, books, prints, etc., is given, a brief description of the property should be inserted instead of the words “the sum of.....dollars.”

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR

FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1915

GEORGE L. RIVES, ESQ.,

SIR:

During the year 1915, there entered the Central Building of the Library 2,558,717 persons. Without doubt a considerable number of them came as sightseers, while a large proportion of those who came to read or to study left no record of their presence except that they were counted as they entered the building. This is a result of the presence of those books, magazines, or papers in the various reading rooms of the Library to which access is perfectly free, without the necessity of making any written application. Many thousands of the readers in the Library go directly to the Main Reading Room to consult some of the books of reference or general literature on the shelves in that room. Either they find the desired books for themselves, or are directed to them by some of the attendants. Having consulted the books, they leave the building, and there is no record of whether they merely looked up a date or some other single fact, or studied for hours in the preparation of a newspaper article or of a chapter of a book.

Whenever a reader makes written application for a book not on open shelves, it is, of course, possible to obtain some record of his presence and of the kind of work he did in the Library. It appears, then, that last year 827,664 readers in the Central Building called for books, and that they were supplied with a total number of 2,289,436 volumes. (In 1914, 711,122 readers called for 2,127,328 books.)

To leave for a moment the work of the Central Building, it should be said that the Branch Libraries issued for home use 10,384,579 books during 1915. (In 1914, the total was 9,516,482 books.)

At the end of 1915 there were 996,574 books and 312,853 pamphlets in the Reference Department (Central Building), in all 1,309,427 pieces. There were 1,100,952 volumes in the Circulation Department. The total number of pieces in the whole Library was, therefore, 2,410,379. The number of employees at the close of the year was 1248.

REFERENCE DEPARTMENT

INFORMATION DIVISION

Of the thousands who came to the Library last year, very many of them found their way first of all to the Information Division. The attendants are accustomed to give help to men and women of learning who are familiar with books and libraries, but not yet familiar with the resources and procedure in this Library. On the other hand, they are called upon to answer simple questions which may be satisfied by a railroad time-table, a guide-book, the City Directory, or other commonplace works of reference. Then again, they may help some beginner who lacks the most elementary knowledge of how to use the Library, or how to find information from books. The public catalogue of the Library is in this Division, and there may be seen working here, perhaps side by side, a distinguished writer or teacher seeking to verify some doubtful point, such as a question of foreign bibliography, and an immigrant who is trying to lay the foundations of his education.

MAIN READING ROOM

(READERS' DIVISION)

More than a quarter of a million readers applied for books in this room in 1915. The exact number was 255,895. There were issued from the delivery desk 587,529 volumes. The favorite subject was "Literature"; this word in library terminology is used to describe poetry, fiction, drama, essays, and general periodicals. The second subject in demand was "Economics and Sociology." Considering the large number of readers who go directly to the Economics Division for books in this field, the fact indicates a great public interest in economic and social questions. The third subject in point of interest was "History."

An innovation last year was the use of time stamps at the delivery desk. All the slips which the readers file when calling for books are now stamped with the exact time when the books are ready for use. Examination has been made, on various days, of the slips issued between certain hours. It appears that seventy-five per cent. of the books were ready for the reader in ten minutes or less from the time when he called for them. Twenty-seven per cent. of the whole number were ready in five minutes or less. In less than ten per cent. of the cases did the reader have to wait more than fifteen minutes for his book or books. In the case of the twenty-two per cent. of calls which took more than ten minutes to answer, an examination was made of the causes for the delay. They were found to be: first, that the books in question were shelved not in the regular stack, but in some other part of the building; second, that the reader had made out his slip inaccurately, and it was necessary for the assistant to refer to the public catalogue (about ten per cent. of all slips filed have to be returned to the Information Desk for correction or for additional information); third, that one reader had filed a large number of slips during an especially busy hour.

AMERICAN HISTORY DIVISION

(INCLUDING RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS)

To this Division during the year came persons who were making researches on such varied topics as, for instance, the Shawnee Indians, the Secession conventions of the Confederate States, the Monroe Doctrine from the point of view of Latin-America, Mexican archaeology, the early history of Florida, the history of American newspapers, and early French travel in America. With the completion of Mr. I. N. Phelps Stokes's monumental work, "The Iconography of Manhattan Island," has ended a large amount of research which was being carried on in this Division.

Many of the additions of 1915 were of more than ordinary importance. They included: An Elegy on the much deplored death of Nathaniel Collins, Boston, 1685; Grant and release of one eighth part of Carolina [1744]; New England Primer, Middletown, 1797; New American Magazine, Woodbridge, N. J., 1758; The Battle of Brooklyn, a farce, Edinburgh, 1777; David Ogden's The Claims of the inhabitants of the town of Newark, Woodbridge, N. J., 1766; and Anne Bradstreet's Several Poems, Boston, 1678. Accessions of important broadsides of the Revolutionary period, Connecticut Acts of the eighteenth century, a file of the Courrier Français, Philadelphia, 1794 to 1798, are also of importance.

The principal accessions of the Map Room have been 115 charts of the Great Lakes, seventy-nine Canadian hydrographic charts, 115 Canadian sectional maps, seventy-three Canadian militia, defence and topographical maps, 118 International boundary maps, twenty-eight British Admiralty charts of the Mediterranean and Adriatic seas, and a large atlas entitled "Neptune Americo Septentrional," a work published about 1780 by the French government for the use of the French navy in the New World.

Some changes have taken place in the Division during the year. The establishment of the Manuscript Division and the removal of the manuscripts to another room gave some needed space to the printed books and made it possible to carry on work that hitherto had been postponed. The valuable books in the Reserve Collection have been made safer from fire by the removal of wooden stacks and the building of iron stacks with glass doors. Much work has been done in recataloguing the old and rare books among the Americana.

GENEALOGY AND LOCAL HISTORY DIVISION

In addition to the customary work of this Division there has been an unusual call for books to help persons who are competing for prizes for poster designs and programmes for the anniversary celebrations of cities. More readers than usual have asked for information about decorations of honor, flags, and coats-of-arms. This is a result of the European War. There is an increased interest reflected in our work in the preparation of historical addresses and lectures, while numerous school children, who were writing essays on the history of the Huguenots and New Rochelle, came here for their material.

New American and British genealogies, town, city, and county histories, parish registers and books on heraldry were received during the year to the number of 479. The readers numbered 26,129. They consulted 154,863 volumes.

ART AND PRINTS DIVISION

People came to the Art and Prints Division as to an information bureau, expecting it to answer questions dealing with every possible form of art. Hither came designers in various branches, architects, illustrators, actors and dancers seeking information about costume, teachers in high schools and colleges, artists who are engaged in competitions, authors, lecturers — anyone with a question which can be answered by a picture. Those who wish a painting or print identified, or wish to have its authenticity passed upon, are frequently among the readers. Accessions of the year include additions to the Avery Collection, prints from the bequest of Mrs. Henry Draper, from the estate of Samuel Isham, from the estate of Mrs. Kate Warner, and gifts from E. D. Adams, R. H. Lawrence, the Society of Iconophiles, Mrs. F. O. C. Darley, and Stephen Parrish. The Draper bequest included 336 pieces, with etchings by Haig and others. Mr. Isham's bequest of 476 prints included many old masters, while Mr. Parrish's gift forms as complete a collection of his etchings as it is now possible to make.

In the Print Gallery the exhibition of etchings by seventeenth century artists held over from 1914 until March, 1915. Then came the "Making of a Line Engraving," the second of such exhibitions, in which technical details are illustrated in masterpieces of the art. In November, the gallery was given up to a display of "Portraits of Women," in which the subject matter is of paramount interest.

The smaller gallery has been occupied throughout the year by a selection of prints, mainly mezzotints, from the Cadwalader Collection.

MUSIC DIVISION

The work on the revision of the catalogue has begun, as well as work on the card index of pictures of characters, scenes and stage settings of operas. The number of books and pieces of music added to the Music Division during the year was larger than usual. This was partly due to the expenditure of a larger sum of money for the purchase of compositions, and partly due to a number of small gifts. There have been added a complete edition of the works of Franz Schubert, and the volumes, so far as published, of the complete editions of Franz Liszt and Joseph Haydn. Other additions included a number of modern orchestral scores by Delius, Schoenberg, and Chaikovski, and some modern Russian chamber music, and about twenty-two orchestral scores of the works of the American composers, Bird, Chadwick, Converse, Foote, Hadley, Paine, Kolar and Loeffler, and a nearly complete set of the works of Edward MacDowell.

ECONOMICS DIVISION

This Division now includes the Economics and the Documents Divisions, which were combined on December 4, 1914. During the year, 21,446 readers have come for the purpose of studying the problems of economics and sociology, which are constantly increasing in interest and importance. There have been added 21,728 pieces — books, pamphlets, etc. The effects of the War in Europe have been seen in the character of the investigations pursued. Purchases and other additions have been influenced by this fact, for the interest in economic and sociological problems is sure to increase greatly at the end of the War.

SCIENCE DIVISION

In 1915, there came to the Science Division 24,712 readers. During the entire year there has been an unusual demand for books on optics, more especially on the manufacture of lenses and the physical properties of optical glass. As in the preceding year, the European War has increased the number of inquiries about pharmaceutical products. In order to facilitate the search for information, and in order to help those who read only English, much time has been spent in selecting and indexing articles in the Philosophical Magazine and in the American Journal of Science. Short bibliographies have been compiled on subjects of especial interest. These include lists on picric acid, oxalic acid, water glass, and Hall effect.

TECHNOLOGY DIVISION

There has been a lively interest in the printed material relating to the technical side of the European War. Investigators have been studying the opportunities afforded for new industries, notably in the coal-tar and petroleum products. The toy makers, who are trying to supply the market hitherto dependent upon imports from Germany, have sent their agents to learn how to make dolls. Information has been sought upon the details of the manufacture of mechanical toys. The production of Christmas tree ornaments has developed to an astonishing degree in America. One of the readers in this Division, who now employs over eighty women, has orders that would justify the employment of as many more if he could find capable workers. This curious industry has been studied in the Technology Division from the first feeble attempts to make tiny glass globes to the important and difficult processes of gilding and silvering.

An important technical periodical was about to go to press when it discovered the necessity for a biographical account of a famous Belgian engineer who had suddenly died. The Technology Division furnished the data in about one hour. A mechanical engineer of a large New England cotton factory was supplied with information about the cost of steam turbine installation. Another engineer desired data on the relative efficiency of steel, aluminum and wood in the construction of aeroplanes. A chemist of a moving picture company came to learn the methods for dyeing films and the recovery of silver waste. One reader has prepared the manuals to be used in educating the salespeople of department stores in the essentials of their work, to acquaint them with the history and processes of manufacture of various articles of glass, leather, silverware, pottery, ivory, amber, and jewelry. These are merely representative questions, taken from among a great number of inquiries.

Other readers and students came to find the cost of mining potash in Germany; the durability of iron telegraph wire; the thermal value of petroleum from Oklahoma oil wells; the French standard gauge for nails and the American equivalent; the effect of alkali upon concrete; a method of spinning asbestos; a description of canal boats used on the River Arno; plans for steel barges; dimensions of the German heavy artillery; and the proper feeding of infants at the age of six months.

A new feature of the work during the past year has been the preparation of annotations to accompany the lists of new technical books appearing in the Bulletin and in the Branch Library News. These notes are either brief summaries written by one of the Staff, or excerpts from reliable book reviews, or both. In order to secure a wider circulation of this material, it has been published from time to time in pamphlet form, under attractive covers and properly indexed and classified. Two numbers have already been issued, and in view of the large demand from the Branch Libraries and from the Technology Division itself, the usefulness of the publication seems to be assured.

There were 85,326 readers registered during the year in the Technology and Patent rooms. Of these, 70,282 came to the Technology Division. This was a sixty-four per cent. increase for the Technology Room over the year 1914, and a thirteen per cent. increase for the Patent Room.

ORIENTAL DIVISION

Men and women of Oriental birth form the majority of the readers in this Division. The total number of readers was 3,839, or 294 more than in 1914. The War has interfered with the service of the Division, as it has interrupted the arrival of newspapers and periodicals from the Eastern Mediterranean region. The readers have had to rely more than usual upon the newspapers printed in their native languages published in this country. Two of the centres of book supply, Constantinople and Beirut, have been practically cut off. The connection with Egypt is fortunately maintained, and consignments of books have come from Cairo, including works lithographed in Persia. Books from India and the Far East are arriving, although the amount of literature coming from those countries has been limited, a fact that is probably due to the diversion of the interest of the people from literary to political and military subjects.

During the latter part of the year the Division compiled a bibliography of Buddhism. It deals with the philosophy, history and art of this Indian faith. It should be of interest to the general reader as well as to the special student. The bibliography was published in the Bulletin for February, 1916.

JEWISH DIVISION

The number of volumes and pamphlets credited to this Division is now about 24,000. Since the outbreak of the European War the Jews of Eastern Europe have passed through a period of suffering unprecedented even in their own history. The Eastern war-zone happens to be mainly within the territory of the ancient kingdom of Poland, whose former provinces still contain about half of the entire Jewish people.

As a consequence of the distressing plight of so many Jews, their literature in all its branches has been in a state of suspension. Various literary projects have been abandoned, literary activities brought to a standstill, publishers have failed, newspapers and periodicals have been suppressed, suspended, or reduced in size. The literature published in Hebrew, which even in good times is not self-supporting and leads a precarious existence, has been stricken hardest — almost entirely wiped out. A number of literary men have come over to this country and most of them intend to make their homes here. Several friends of Jewish literature in various European Jewish centres, Berlin, Vienna, The Hague, Petrograd, and Warsaw, have been reported as engaged in collecting documents and other material relating to the Jews in the present War. Otherwise, the energies of Jewish workers everywhere, in the neutral as well as in the belligerent countries, are now concentrated on the relief work for the sufferers and on preparing the work to be done after the end of the War for the amelioration of their condition. The question is now: Will the homeless Jewish literature, emerging from its present crisis, find a favorable soil and a new centre in the New World?

Of the accessions of the year in the older literature, there should be mentioned: Obadiah Sforno's "Or ammim" [philosophical researches], Bologna, 1537; "Les oeuvres de Philon ivif," Paris, 1575; Ludwig Mayer's "Views in Palestine, from the original drawings of L. Mayer," with text in English and French, London, 1804; "The Australian Israelite," Melbourne, 1871-75; "Prophetarum Posteriorum codex Babylonicus Petropolitanus, edidit Hermannus Strack," Petropoli, 1876, which is a facsimile reproduction of the St. Petersburg codex, the oldest dated manuscript of the Hebrew Bible, written just one thousand years ago (A. D. 916), and having the superlinear system of vowel-points and accents; eight volumes of radical Yiddish newspapers, published in New York, Boston, and London, 1886-97; "Palestine and Syria," a collection of 47 photographs, mostly signed "Bonfils," undated, but made after the year 1900, and presented by the collector, Mr. W. G. Bibb.

SLAVONIC DIVISION

While the number of readers has increased (17,615 in 1915 as compared with 15,702 in 1914), there has been much difficulty in obtaining Russian books and periodicals on schedule time. Newspapers and magazines have been secured, however, by direct mail, and shipments of Russian books either by parcels post or, packed in boxes, by freight or express, by way of Sweden or by way of Vladivostok. Daily papers come from Russia in twenty to twenty-five days. As another natural consequence of the War there have been received fewer publications of Russian societies and of individual scholars than in previous years.

A number of Russian professional men have been among the readers, as well as Russian commercial agents, manufacturers and clerks. American engineers and business men have come to familiarize themselves with the sources of information on Russian commerce, industries, shipping and railroads. Many of this new class of readers have established offices in New York in order to foster trade relations between the United States and Russia. American and Russian writers on Russian art, music, the ballet, and the opera have been furnished with information. Material for biographies of the newer Russian writers has been given to the collaborators on American encyclopedias. Correspondence has been carried on with people in all parts of the country to answer inquiries on Russian subjects, and to help students, scholars, lecturers and librarians. Recently the critics on the staffs of New York musical publications have come here for information about the opera "Prince Igor," as well as for illustrations of the first staging of that opera in Petrograd in 1890. Writers of reviews have been supplied with details about the Russian ballet. Some of the leading New York newspapers have applied for material in connection with the Russian war news. Translators from the Russian and other Slavonic languages are coming here more than ever, and some of them have sought advice in the selection of short stories and other literature for translation.

Among the new accessions in the Slavonic Division may be mentioned the collected works of Valeri Bryusov, in 8 volumes; a new illustrated edition of Lermontov, in 4 volumes; new editions of the complete works of Ostrovski, in 12 volumes, and of the works of L. N. Tolstoi, in 24 volumes. Other accessions are: the Jubilee Almanac of the Imperial Academies of Art, Petrograd, 1915; Grand Duke Nikolai Mikhailovich's work on Count Pavel Stroganov, in 3 volumes, and a Polish Genealogy by Polaski. A fine copy has been procured of the rare periodical "Volnoye Slovo" (The Free Word), published by the Zemski Sobor and edited by A. P. Malshinski (1881-1882) and by M. Dragomanov (1882-83). Another addition is the second edition of the rare periodical "Golosa iz Rossii" (Voices from Russia), published at London, by Alexander Gertzen (Herzen), 1858-1860. A considerable collection of Russian books on the War have been acquired, as well as a smaller collection of publications on the same subject in other Slavonic languages.

MANUSCRIPT DIVISION

The resources of the Manuscript Division have been drawn upon during the year to answer inquiries about historical subjects connected with the men of the Revolutionary period, about the American Loyalists, about the part played by the Navy of the United States in the Mexican war, and about the Jay and Clayton-Bulwer treaties. The committee, appointed by the Mayor of New York to have charge of the reception to the Atlantic Fleet in 1915, found useful material here. Researches were made about Canadian history, including the Montreal campaign of 1760; the muster rolls of Connecticut in the American Revolution; Indians of the State of New York; the Lutheran Church in Schoharie county; the early financial relations of the South American colonies with Spain; the history of Corea in transition; the influence of American literature on the American Revolution; the early Knickerbocker School of writers; commercial relations between New York and China at the end of the eighteenth century; and the trade of America with foreign countries during the Napoleonic wars.

Students have come here to find the original sources of information concerning various American families prominent in Colonial times; to investigate the early surveys of Westchester county; the introduction of shorthand systems in the State of New York; the history of journalism in the United States; the history of negro slavery in the United States; the history of the typewriter; and the history of wit in the eighteenth century. A number of persons who are engaged in the art of miniature painting have been studying illuminated manuscripts of Europe and the Orient; while other manuscripts were consulted by specialists with reference to their text or to their palaeography.

During the year, 375 applicants registered and were supplied with 776 volumes, 183 boxes, 5 packages, and 1,082 separate pieces of manuscript. Many more persons, who were not registered, sought advice and information pertaining to books, articles, or addresses, upon which they were engaged, or else they submitted manuscripts for an opinion as to their genuineness or intrinsic value.

The principal purchase, as well as the best accession of the year, consists of the papers of William Smith, the historian of New York. They are in seven folio volumes, one atlas folio, and one portfolio of loose papers, and they constitute a remarkable collection of primary evidence on the administrative and political history of New York in its most stirring period — 1763–83. There is also material of as early a date as 1753. These papers include the material upon which Smith's "Continuation" of his history of the province was founded, as well as the original manuscript of the "Continuation" itself, with numerous eliminations and revisions.

PERIODICALS DIVISION

The collection of periodicals relating to the War has been of particular interest to many readers. It numbers about sixty titles; some of the more important of them are: The Great War (London), Grössere Deutschland (Weimar), Histoire illustrée de la guerre de 1914 (Paris), Historia de la guerra europea de 1914 (Valencia), Illustrated War News (London), J'ai vu (Paris), New York Times Current History, Panorama de la guerre (Paris), T. P.'s Journal of Great Deeds (London), The Times' History and Encyclopaedia of the War (London), Verdenskrigen (Copenhagen), La Voce (Florence), Weltkrieg (New York).

Trade journals have also been in constant demand: nearly a fourth of all the periodicals called for in 1915 are in this class. Thus, a representative weekly journal dealing with the subject of advertising was called for 646 times during the year; one dealing with drygoods, 902 times; one on architecture, 973 times; one on hotels, 259 times; and one on jewelry, 279 times. There were 549 calls for a certain weekly dealing with railways, 1,693 for one about real estate, and 1,919 calls for a journal on the subject of moving pictures.

There were 161,185 readers who signed slips for periodicals during the year — an average of 445 a day. This does not take into account the use of over ninety periodicals on open racks. No record is kept of how many times they are read, or by how many people.

NEWSPAPER DIVISION

The newspapers are being consulted more than ever for the purpose of compiling statistics regarding the prices of securities and of merchandise of various kinds. They are also being used by persons who wish to get first-hand knowledge of the history of newspapers and of such subjects as advertising, head-lines, cartoons, and editorial articles. Writers of plays and of short stories consult the older papers for local color. The war collection of newspapers, from forty different European cities, has been useful to newspaper reporters and a continuous source of interest to other readers. Of current papers in the Newspaper Division, there are 256 from the United States and 73 from foreign countries; 26 different foreign countries are represented. Three of the leading South American dailies have been added. A test was made during December, 1915, to discover the approximate daily average of persons entering the Newspaper Room. The count showed 1,375 for the month, and there is reason to believe that this is true from October 1 to May 1. During the summer months, the number of readers is naturally smaller.

ORDER DIVISION

This Report has dealt, so far, with the public rooms of the Library. That a library possesses any rooms except those where books are issued to readers is a fact which seems to be unknown to many persons. The sign with the inscription "Business Offices Only," which stands in one of the corridors of the building, caused a woman to remark: "I didn't know they had any business offices in a library. What can they find to do in them?" She was evidently quite unaware of the large amount of work involved in buying books and getting them ready for the readers.

During 1915, the Order Division received, for the use of the Reference Department, 46,411 volumes, of which 15,479 were purchases and 30,932 gifts. The number of pamphlets was 66,181, of which 10,895 were purchases and 55,286 gifts. Gifts have been received of 4,667 volumes and 2,518 pamphlets for the Circulation Department.

In the field of American history, state statute law, municipal reports, music, and mountaineering, the purchases have been particularly large and important. Special attention has been given to the acquisition of material relating to the European War. Many hundred pamphlets have been collected and bound. Many war posters have also been secured, and war post-cards from most of the belligerent countries have been collected in scrap books.

The most important gifts of the year were comprised in the bequests of the late Mrs. Henry Draper, which were described in an article in the Bulletin for May, 1915. Two other important gifts were from Miss Ada Rehan and from Mr. Edward Walter West.

From Miss Rehan came a collection of twelve extra-illustrated editions, on large paper, of Augustin Daly's revivals of Shakespeare's plays; "Old Comedies," including Tennyson's "Foresters"; eight prompt books; playbills of Daly's Theatre from 1879-92 and 1896-97 (in 16 volumes); and scores of the music of Daly's Theatre productions. This collection contains, in all, thirty-eight bound volumes, three bound scores, and eighteen packages of scores.

From Mr. Edward Walter West of Brooklyn came a collection of eighty-nine volumes, extra-illustrated with many rare plates, and beautifully bound in half and full morocco, with special tooling. Among the titles are the following: "Des Cris de Paris," Paris, 1737; De Foe's "Robinson Crusoe," London, 1790; "Old Landmarks and Historic Personages of Boston," by Samuel Adams Drake, 5 volumes, Boston, 1900; "Bucaniers of America," by John Esquemeling, 3 volumes, London, 1684; Washington Irving's "Sketch Book," 10 volumes, New York, 1865; Sterne's "Sentimental Journey," 5 volumes, New York, 1884; and extra-illustrated editions of works by La Bruyère, Erasmus, Fielding, La Fontaine, Goldsmith, Thomas Rowlandson, Le Sage, Swift, James Thomson, Izaak Walton, and others.

Other gifts of importance are noted in the reports of the various Divisions, and a list of the principal donors is printed in the Appendix.

ACCESSIONS DIVISION

If ever there was a division of any library calculated to estimate the immensity of learning, with a wish for sobriety in matters literary, it is the Reference Accessions Division.

Here there are no questions of sound or unsound canons of criticism, no fears for style, no doubts of the genius of the author, no hesitation about lack of funds, no question of the author's right name, only the inevitable mass which must be classified, stamped, accessioned, bound, glued, mounted, riveted, perforated, or whatever you will.

The shapes in which printed material comes to the Accessions Division vary from the size of a postage stamp to broadsides of elephantine proportions.

The classifier steals glances at all these books to find out whether they are fact or fiction, sacred or secular, and he has aesthetic feelings for the bibliophilic wonders which come to him — but he must be materialistic. He must ask: Has this book body enough (never mind its soul) to guide it through the wear and tear of the Main Reading Room?

Nothing can preserve the paper on which many modern books are printed. It is justifiable to be indignant with the makers of wood-pulp paper. The efforts of librarians to preserve printed records are set at naught by the perishable character of most of the modern paper.

During the year, 35,406 volumes and 2,665 pamphlets were accessioned. Of this number 18,508 volumes were purchased or were received on exchange account and 16,898 volumes and 1,278 pamphlets were gifts. Included in this record are 1,315 "pamphlet volumes" made by binding together in single volumes 1,408 unbound volumes and 15,129 pamphlets, grouped so as to bring together a sufficient number of pieces to make volumes of about two inches in thickness, each relating to a single subject.

The total number of volumes recorded as available for readers December 31, 1915, was 996,574 and of pamphlets, 312,853; an aggregate of 1,309,427 pieces in the Reference Department.

CATALOGUING DIVISION

The number of volumes newly catalogued in the Reference Department for the year 1915 was 22,596; of pamphlets, 19,419; of maps, 233. The cataloguing of 783 volumes and 694 pamphlets was carried on by adding to entries already existing. There were 10,165 volumes and 1,670 pamphlets recatalogued; and 7,829 volumes and 1,600 pamphlets catalogued by the use of cards purchased from the Library of Congress.

Of works serial in their form, magazines, society publications, etc., there were catalogued 2,722 volumes and 4,681 pamphlets, a total of 7,403. In addition, 14,241 volumes and 12,079 pamphlets were added to entries already in the catalogue. There were recatalogued 1,452 volumes and 903 pamphlets.

In all, 59,788 volumes, 41,001 pamphlets, 233 maps were handled, making a total of 101,022 items.

PRINTING OFFICE

No new equipment was added to the Printing Office during the year, but there were procured three new series of old style type faces of recognized merit, which are more suitable for certain classes of work.

During the year there were set 62,875 titles, from which 655,541 cards, were printed — a decrease of 171 titles and 39,482 cards from the output of the previous year. The total number of copies printed of stationery forms, finance forms, accession books and blank books, etc., was 11,193,486, an increase over the previous year of 1,384,531 pieces. Of publications there were printed 696,000 copies, an increase over the previous year of 92,010 copies.

BINDERY

In the Bindery 55,183 volumes were bound, 1,831 volumes were repaired, and 17,336 miscellaneous maps, photographs, portfolios, pamphlets, pamphlet boxes, magazine binders, etc., were mounted or made, making a total of 74,350 volumes and miscellaneous pieces that passed through the Bindery. The total shows a decrease of 1,028 pieces from the previous year, which is due to the difficult nature of the present work. In some of the volumes the paper is so worthless that binding is impossible without first giving the paper special treatment.

LIBRARY SCHOOL

In June, 1915, the School gave diplomas to twenty-one graduates, and certificates to thirty-eight junior students, representing eighteen states, the District of Columbia, Canada, China, and Finland. In September, it enrolled for the present school year forty-one juniors, and twenty-seven seniors who continue on the roll, with two graduates taking extra senior courses but not working for diplomas. This enrollment covers twenty states, the District of Columbia, Canada, China, Finland, Japan and Sweden.

In the case of the foreign students, nearly all have come to the United States for the express purpose of entering the School, and the majority expect to return to their own countries to introduce American library technique and methods of administration. In parts of the Orient the public library is just beginning to obtain recognition as a factor in public education and progress. Two students are here on scholarships conferred by their home governments.

Commencement occurred on June 11, 1915, Mr. Charles Howland Russell of the Board of Trustees, presiding. The Commencement address was delivered by Mr. Andrew Keogh, Reference Librarian of Yale University, who spoke on "The Librarian as a Unifier." The text of this address was printed in the Bulletin for August, 1915.

The only important innovation of the year was an experimental course of lectures designated as the "May Course for Librarians." Librarians and members of library staffs from a district extending one hundred miles or more around New York, were notified of this course, and twenty-three libraries were represented by forty-four persons. The lectures concerned recent poetry, drama and fiction, book-reviews, book-selection and story-telling. Regular students of the School were admitted to these lectures, and many of them attended.

MUNICIPAL REFERENCE LIBRARY

A steadily increasing use of this Library has been made by all departments of the City government, particularly the ones in the Municipal Building. The total number of books and pamphlets received was 12,685. The number of inquiries answered, including those received by letter and by telephone, was 8,023. During the year, 6,693 persons borrowed 10,836 books.

There are few libraries in the city whose resources have not been utilized in some way to help the readers at this library. The special libraries maintained by business corporations and organizations of various kinds have generously assisted. So important are these special libraries to those who wish to know about the sources of information in the city, that the Municipal Reference Library has been glad to lead in an effort to organize them for mutual benefit. Four meetings of persons interested in special library work, held in the Municipal Building, have resulted in the formation of a New York Special Libraries Association.

These are some of the questions which came over the telephone in one day. (Of course, many others came by letter or by word of mouth.)

Do you know of any publication entitled "New York City"? What is the best book on hospital construction? Who are the new members of the Board of Aldermen? What are the Standing Committees of the State Legislature? How many miles of paved and unpaved streets are there in New York City? (From the Traffic Division of the Police Department.) What was the population of the Borough of Richmond in 1913? Has Mr. —— been transferred from the Bureau of —— to the Bureau of ——? Can you furnish a copy of the law pertaining to the disposal of trade waste? What can you tell me about the Chapin Home for the Aged and Infirm? What is the business address of Justice Samuel Greenbaum? In order to secure a marriage license, does one need to take a birth certificate to the Marriage License Bureau? When is the next civil service examination for stenographer to be held and what speed is required?

The Municipal Reference Library Notes has been published weekly, except during July and August. Libraries, city officials, and, in fact, everyone having a legitimate use for it, have been put on the mailing list on request. About two-thirds of the two hundred periodicals on file are received by gift or in exchange for the Notes.

Numerous bibliographies and special lists of references have been prepared on request. Of those published in the Notes, two of the most important were: "Port and Terminal Facilities of the Port of New York" and a "List of References on Systems and Methods of Office Filing."

Early in 1915, at the suggestion of the Chamberlain, the Library began to prepare a new edition of the Municipal Year Book of the City of New York, which was first published in 1913. The revision resulted in an entirely new volume which contains a precise statement of the organization and functions of every department of the City and County governments, with statistical tables, a directory of officials, and a complete index.

EXHIBITIONS

Of the exhibitions in the Central Building during 1915, there should be mentioned a collection of books and prints about flower gardens, first displayed to the public on January 25. Rare and valuable books were shown in cases, while about two hundred popular books were placed on open shelves for examination. The latter were all books which were duplicated in the Circulation Department, and were recommended to readers in a printed list called "Flower Gardens," which was distributed at the exhibition as well as at the Branch Libraries. Many of the rare books were lent by Mrs. Beatrix Farrand, who also gave most valuable advice in the compilation of the printed list.

On April 29, an exhibition illustrating the education of women was opened in the Main Exhibition Room of the Library. It consisted of manuscripts, books, portraits, and needlework from the collection of George A. Plimpton, Esq., of New York. It was lent to the Library by Mr. Plimpton, not only for its intrinsic interest, but to commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of Barnard College of Columbia University.

When the Atlantic Fleet visited New York harbor in May, an exhibition of "Prints and Manuscripts Relating to the American Navy" was held in Room 112.

In December, an exhibition descriptive of the great canals of the world was opened in the Main Exhibition Room. Hundreds of books, maps, and views from the Library's collection, supplemented by material from the private collection of Mr. William Barclay Parsons, were displayed in systematic order so as to illustrate the historical development of the principal canals.

PUBLICATIONS

A list of the publications of the Reference Department in 1915 will be found in Table V of the Appendix. See page 250.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

CIRCULATION

Over ten million books were borrowed for home use in 1915. The exact number was 10,384,579. This is the greatest number ever borrowed in one year. It represents an increase of 868,097 over 1914, and based on the latest estimate of the population (3,039,118 * for Manhattan, Richmond, and The Bronx) means a circulation of 3.4 per capita. Only six Branches report losses in circulation for the year. These decreases are probably accounted for by the fact that the foreign population is constantly shifting, thousands of people moving to the Borough of The Bronx, from which district many of the larger gains are reported. The Central Circulation Branch, including the Children's Room, had the largest circulation, 585,960. Next in order come the Tremont Branch with 436,855, the Seward Park Branch with 397,934, and the Woodstock Branch with 388,708. Under the special rule allowing each reader to borrow eight books at one time for use during the vacation period, 59,302 volumes were issued.

STOCK OF BOOKS

At the close of 1915 there were available in the Circulation Department 1,100,952 volumes. Of this total, 1,029,996 volumes are for home use, the rest are reference books which must be used in the buildings. Books in twenty-seven foreign languages to the number of 112,834 are represented in the figures given above. These are distributed throughout the Branches, according to the local needs. Books in French and in German are in every Branch. Notwithstanding the fact that it has been increasingly difficult to import foreign books during the War, 10,445 volumes have been added to these collections. About fifty different newspapers, and 400 periodicals in the English language, seventy-five newspapers, and 100 periodicals in foreign languages were on file at the Branches. The total number of foreign periodicals is somewhat less than in previous years, owing to the suspension or irregularity of issue of many titles. Of the periodicals received, forty were in embossed type for blind readers.

BOOKS PURCHASED

The Book Order Office purchased 197,816 volumes. In addition 4,667 volumes and 2,518 pamphlets were received as gifts and sent to the Branches. The custom of receiving new books on approval has continued, and of the 7,194 new titles examined, 5,452 were added to the Library. Of these, 1,630 were in foreign languages. Subscriptions have been placed for 3,805 magazines and 371 newspapers for 1916. In addition 1,162 magazines and 274 newspapers are received as gifts. The number of magazines bound was 1,136. All magazines and newspapers withdrawn from Branches have been sorted for binding, for the picture collection, for exchange, or for disposition as old paper.

CATALOGUING OFFICE

The work of the Cataloguing Office has been practically the same as in previous years. There were 191,297 books handled during the year — an increase of 19,054 over 1914. The average per day was 638 books.

PICTURE COLLECTION

A year ago it became apparent that a picture collection for lending was desirable in the Circulation Department. Consequently, the Cataloguing Office began to gather, classify, and prepare pictures for circulation, until, at the end of the year, there were 17,991 pictures. More than half of them are mounted; the rest are in folders, to be mounted when desired.

A surprising number of these pictures came from unbound magazines and old books, which might otherwise have been sold for old paper. The collection also contains 5,444 post-cards, 3,500 of which were presented early in the year.

Requests for the pictures have come from schools of elementary grade, both public and parochial, high schools, city history clubs, settlements, Sunday schools, moving picture actors, advertisers, and others. The use in high schools has been mainly by the teachers of literature, who wished material to illustrate the Sir Roger de Coverly Papers, Ivanhoe, the Odyssey, and other classics.

The elementary schools have made frequent requests for pictures on special days and seasons, and for help in illustrating geography and American history. Several teachers from institutions for the deaf mutes have found the pictures an aid in telling stories to the children in the lower grades. Collections of post-cards have several times been used to illustrate lectures given with the radiopticon. Some of the subjects in frequent demand are Shakespeare, the Panama Canal, the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and costumes of all nations and periods.

Borrowers include not only people who have been card holders in the Branches, but an increasing number whose first interest in the Library was aroused by the picture collection. Since September, when the pictures were first issued, the increase in use has been rapid. In October 409 pictures were borrowed, in November 806, and in December 1,173.

INTERBRANCH LOAN

Fifty per cent. of the books supplied in 1915 by the Interbranch Loan Office reached the applicant within three days after he had made his request. During the year, 95,184 books were supplied, out of a total of 127,598 asked for. The others were too popular to be spared from the Branch which owned them, or else they were reference books, or otherwise not available. An additional 6,571 were lent as "sets" for temporary reference use, etc., making, altogether, 101,755 titles lent between Branches.

There is a certain fascination in the work of sending books from one part of the city to another. The assistants never see the readers whom they are serving, but they learn to know them after a fashion, and to become interested in their tastes.

Fifty-five short lists of books were made for readers who wanted to know the resources of the Branches on certain subjects. An interesting request was for "illustrated editions of standard works used in the study of the English classics." Illustrations chosen from these books were used to make lantern slides to help in the study of literature in the high schools.

The picture collection has been of great service in supplementing demands for illustrated books on special subjects to be used for school reference work. The requests are now for "Twenty illustrated books and as many pictures as possible." The average number of calls has been 417 per day, and to answer these requires a constant exercise of accuracy, judgment and imagination. One has to find exactly what a reader wishes when he asks for "Jones' haste" — meaning Rider Haggard's "Joan Haste." A call for a book with the singular title "Lisping of Scripture" proves to mean Scripture's book on defective speech, entitled "Stuttering and Lisping." When a reader wrote "Chase Beatrice through a Dartmoor window," it turned out that he was not really as frivolous as he seemed. He had copied the catalogue card, running the author's name and the title together. The card — giving the author's family name first — had read simply:

Chase, Beatrice.

Through a Dartmoor window.

READING ROOMS

The total attendance in the adult reading rooms in the Branches was 1,224,526, a loss of 43,353 from 1914. The greatest use of reading rooms was at the Seward Park and Hamilton Fish Park Branches on the lower East Side. One reason for the loss in total attendance is because fewer men have been out of work. The Sunday attendance in the five adult reading rooms, which were open, was 38,694.

READING WITH THE FINGERS IN THE LIBRARY FOR THE BLIND

LIBRARY FOR THE BLIND

The year was one of unprecedented activity. It shares this distinction, however, with the majority of the libraries for the seeing, and this fact may be illuminating to those who consider that blindness creates a class apart, untouched by the world's interests.

The total circulation, including magazines and music scores, was 31,528, an increase of 5,304 over last year. This circulation is divided among the more important types as follows: American Braille, 4,892; European Braille, 7,798; Braille music, 1,103; Moon, 5,649; New York Point, 9,866; Point music, 2,113. Of the total circulation, only 1,065 were due to renewals. There was only a normal increase in the number of active readers, 896 in 1915. The distribution of circulation according to classes, percentages, etc., may be found in tables giving this information for the Branches. There were sent out by mail 26,716 volumes, and by express 410.

Three embossed sections of the catalogue were issued early in the year, one list of the books in the European Braille type, and two lists of the music scores. Music scores were circulated to the number of 3,216. The home teacher has given 280 lessons, paid 476 visits, and exchanged 318 books.

Owing to the lamentable increase of blindness in Europe as a result of the War, there will naturally be a greater production of embossed books from the European presses. Before the War a large fund for embossing books had been raised in England through the efforts of Mr. C. Arthur Pearson. The result is already noticeable in the lengthening list of English publications. The American presses have not been as active as usual, pending further developments in the type question.

TRAVELLING LIBRARIES

The Travelling Libraries Office has continued to supplement the work of the Branch Libraries by furnishing books to communities and homes in outlying districts of the city, to churches, Sunday schools, settlements, clubs, stores, factories, in fact, to any community or institution not readily served by a regular Branch. The number of such stations is 952. Of these, 165 are in Staten Island. The total circulation through these agencies was 962,355 volumes, which represents a small decrease when compared with the circulation of the previous year. This decrease is probably accounted for by the curtailment of the vacation playground work of the public schools, as the actual number of stations has increased by 72. The largest circulation through a single station was reported from the one in the Columbia University Library, a total of 25,423 for the year. Following in circulation are the stations in the Industrial School No. 15, maintained by the American Female Guardian Society; the Italian School, under charge of the Children's Aid Society; and the Hunt's Point Presbyterian Church; which report circulations of 15,880, 15,612, and 15,233 respectively.

Among the stations in factories and mercantile establishments, about sixty in number, that in the National Cloak and Suit Company is particularly worthy of note. This library is in charge of a salaried librarian who has formed a business readers' club among the employees. All members of this club pledge themselves to read at least one business book a month. The books are advertised by means of the National Library Bulletin, a mimeographed sheet calling attention to some new book of interest. During the year this station has reported a circulation of 12,663.

The work with the Fire and Police stations has gone on with but few changes during the year. One of the fire boats, the "David A. Boody," was destroyed in a storm early in the year, and the books went down with the ship. This, however, was only a temporary check, for the "Seth Low," with a new collection of books, soon replaced the "David A. Boody." There was a special demand among the men for books on fire prevention, fire fighting, etc., some of these books seeming to obtain the popularity of a "best seller." Books on the European War have also proved popular.

In addition to the Fire and Police stations, fifty-seven Federal, State, and City Department offices have been supplied with books. These report a total circulation of 28,784. Among these stations may be mentioned two camps of enlisted men, an armory, two army posts, and ships of the coast guard service.

The number of books supplied to the public, elementary, high, and vacation schools, has shown a slight decrease — probably due to the many changes in the public school system.

The growth of the community libraries has been, perhaps, the most interesting development of the year. In 1915 the work with children in these stations has been in charge of a children's librarian, who has not only made regular visits to the stations, but has, with the help of a Library School student, instructed volunteer workers. In the Hunt's Point station the enthusiasm for the library has been sufficient to start an effort to raise a fund for the salary of a regular librarian. The City Island library moved, early in the year, to more attractive quarters nearer the post office and the centre of the community. In several of the community libraries the salary of the local librarian is collected by a committee interested in neighborhood improvements. Permanent quarters have, in some cases, been provided in settlements or in church buildings, and systematic visits are made by librarians from the Travelling Libraries Office. In time it is hoped that many of these community libraries will grow into regular Branches.

Among the miscellaneous agencies to which books were furnished are the Shakespeare Celebration Association and the Church Peace Society. A complete list of stations will be found in the table on page 288.

WORK WITH CHILDREN

One new children's room has been added by the opening of the George Bruce Branch. While making the initial selection of books for this room, the children's librarian visited the schools and other institutions of the neighborhood and familiarized herself with the streets, — from "the street of all nations" at the rear of the library, to the streets in the neighborhood of Columbia University. This preliminary survey of the community had the effect of bringing the resources of the children's room into relation with the immediate needs of many types of readers, and it proved its value by the ease with which the room was administered as soon as it was opened. There has been great enthusiasm among the children of this community of Manhattanville for reading in the library itself. The window seats, the settle in front of the fireplace, and the armchairs are favorite seats of boys and girls of all ages.

The number of children coming into the children's rooms of all the Branches was 1,608,753. In 1914, it was 1,502,185. The circulation of books from children's rooms was 3,938,031. In 1914, it was 3,584,458. The total circulation of books to children, including the figures recorded by Travelling Libraries, was 4,415,794, or forty-two per cent. of the total circulation of the Library.

It is estimated that at least one-third of the folk tales, American histories, biographies, books on civics and juvenile fiction circulated to children are also read by adult members of families of foreign birth or parentage, not for the purpose of directing the children's reading but for enlightenment and enjoyment.

WORK WITH ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS

For ten years the Library has worked with the elementary schools to such extent as its resources have permitted. The Library began by making itself known to principals and teachers in the schools near the Branches. Notices and lists of books were posted in the schools, addresses were given at teachers' conferences and school assemblies. The librarians had personal interviews with the teachers. A Supervisor of work with children was appointed in 1906, special collections of books were placed in the children's reading rooms the following year. The use of these books in the libraries had a perceptible effect on the quality of books borrowed at the schools as well as at the libraries. A number of principals and teachers paid their first visits to Branch Libraries and asked to be allowed to bring their classes to learn how to use books with greater readiness.

In 1910, systematic group work with visiting classes from the public schools was established. In that year, 112 classes came with their teachers during school hours to spend an hour in the investigation of a topic in history, geography or English; or in reading from books suggested by the children's librarians.

This work began at the Tompkins Square Branch with Public School No. 15. Other schools of the neighborhood soon asked to send classes. Similar work has since been regularly carried on at Branch Libraries in different sections of the city. This group work has attracted the interest of visitors from other cities, both in America and in Europe. Photographic representations of it have been sent to a number of these cities. In 1914-15 the Tompkins Square, Seward Park, and Hudson Park Branches worked more extensively with the "Pre-vocational" schools in their neighborhood. In each neighborhood there is one school of this type, and from five to twelve other schools. It is obvious that no fixed limitation upon the service of a library can be made in the interest of a single school,—the library must respond to the general needs of its community.

The use of a library by groups or classes may be made equally profitable to school and library, but it cannot take the place of voluntary use by the individual boy or girl who comes unconsciously to test the reality of interests roused in school or outside. Each form of contact with the library, the group or the individual, affects the other according to the degree that spontaneous interest and pleasure in reading is roused in teachers, children and librarians. Visits to the schools to see the children in their class rooms, workshops, and playgrounds are now made regularly by children's librarians. The latter frequently give informal talks about books in class rooms and at school assemblies.

During the past year the Supervisor has addressed meetings of parents and teachers at Spuyten Duyvil, St. George, and Tottenville, as well as a class of students at the Brooklyn Training School for Teachers. She also visited the libraries of Detroit, Gary, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia, and the State Normal College of Michigan, while lecturing on children's reading and the work of The New York Public Library with children.

OTHER WORK WITH CHILDREN

The children's librarian of the Travelling Libraries reports a year of unusual personal activity. She has visited playgrounds, recreation centres and all stations and institutions where books are lent to children. While making these visits she gave special attention to the selection, distribution and use of books in the children's collections. Three afternoons each week she has given to the stations at Hunt's Point, Van Nest, and Bedford Park in The Bronx and the Little Mothers' Aid Association in Greenwich Street. The students of the Library School assigned to practice under the direction of the children's librarian have shown enthusiasm for the work and have rendered valuable service at the stations.

At the opening of a station at Prince's Bay, the children's librarian gave an address, with stereopticon views, on the work of the Library.

The Central Children's Room has held its usual exhibitions of books and pictures, with special observance of the birthdays of Kate Greenaway and Hans Andersen. It was learned from a visitor in the summer that the children's room in the city of Dunedin, New Zealand, owes its existence to the impression made by his visit to this room soon after it was opened. "The window seat readings have proved most popular with the boys and girls of Dunedin," he said.

Two printed lists have been prepared: "Stories and Poems for Vacation Days," and "Stories, Legends, Songs and Plays for the Christmas Holidays." The latter was designed to accompany the Christmas Exhibit, which was held as usual from November until Twelfth Night.

Friday evenings in December the Central Children's Room was opened for the parents and friends of children. On the first evening the Supervisor gave an informal talk about Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, the founding of St. Nicholas and its effect on the writing of books for children. To the courtesy of Mr. W. B. Clarke, the editor of St. Nicholas, the Children's Room is indebted for copies of his memorial sketch of Mrs. Dodge, and for personal reminiscences of his association with her. The illustrations in color by George Wharton Edwards, of the new edition of "Hans Brinker" were lent by Charles Scribner's Sons, while early volumes of St. Nicholas and portraits of Mrs. Dodge were displayed in the room.

The second evening was devoted to Dickens. His "Christmas Tree" was read aloud, and some of the earliest editions of "Pickwick," "Nicholas Nickleby," and the "Christmas Carol" were shown.

WORK WITH MUSEUMS

Eight years ago an exhibition illustrating Arctic exploration was lent by The American Museum of Natural History to the St. George, the Hudson Park, 67th Street, and Tremont Branches in turn. It proved effective in stimulating interest in books on Arctic life. Since then the work for children in libraries and museums has undergone many changes, but in reporting the exhibitions in use during 1915 at the Washington Heights, Fort Washington, 96th Street, St. Agnes, Webster, 115th Street, 58th Street, Melrose, and Morrisania Branches, it is correct to say that the essential characteristics of a successful library exhibition seem to be the same. It should have color and dramatic interest and look as if it were appropriately placed in the room.

The exhibition about "Indians of the Plains," the one about Esquimaux, and one on "Birds and their Nests" have pleased boys and girls alike. "The Indians of the South West" had greater attraction for the girls, as it was largely composed of baskets and pottery. Both Indian exhibitions had a visible effect on the circulation of books. Any really good exhibition increases the number of books borrowed, although it is not possible to show that by statistics.

STORY-TELLING AND CLUB WORK

The story hours and reading clubs for the older boys and girls have been carried on as usual under the direction of the assistant in charge of story-telling.

There are now fifty-five reading clubs. Story hour groups to the number of 2,489 have gathered in the Branch Libraries and at the Central Children's Room.

The visit of Miss Marie L. Shedlock, the English story-teller, has been the event of greatest interest to the story-tellers and children. Miss Shedlock first inspired the library story hour in America. On Hans Christian Andersen's birthday Miss Shedlock told his story, "The Steadfast Tin Soldier," and told something of his life to a group of children and their parents in the Central Children's Room. On Shakespeare's birthday she told "The Nightingale" to 270 delegates from the reading clubs assembled at the Central Building. This meeting took the form of a personal greeting from each club by a representative who carried back to the regular meeting of his or her club a full account of the joint meeting.

The Yorkville Boys' Club gave a special programme in honor of their club advisor, who is the author of a recent life of Robert Louis Stevenson, dedicated to the boys of the Yorkville Branch. A review of this book was given, the last chapter, "Vailima," was read aloud by a member, while a boy's estimate of "Treasure Island," and a reading of the chapter called "Israel Hands" concluded the literary part of the programme.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

As usual the Branches were used as meeting places by many literary, educational, and social organizations and clubs. The general rule has been to allow the use of an assembly room in a Branch Library for any meeting of an instructive or literary nature, provided that no admission fee was charged, and that nothing of a political, sectarian, or ultra-controversial character was to be discussed. A complete list of meetings will be found in the Appendix. In addition, many classes of foreigners learning English have met regularly in the Branch Libraries.

The Circulation Department has continued to act as intermediary for any person who wished to borrow lantern slides from the Division of Visual Instruction of the University of the State of New York. The use of these slides, secured at the cost of transportation, has steadily increased.

PUBLICATIONS

A list of the publications of the Circulation Department in 1915 will be found in table V of the Appendix. See page 251.

THE GEORGE BRUCE BRANCH, 78 MANHATTAN STREET

DECORATIONS

Through the generosity of friends, the Library has been able to acquire many paintings, etchings, and engravings of note. Chief among these is a collection of ten paintings by N. C. Wyeth, to illustrate Stevenson's "Treasure Island" and "Kidnapped." Among other purchases may be mentioned a collection of large pictures of scenes in the Canadian Rockies, vases, jardinières, window-boxes, plants, and flowers. Since 1909, Mr. Mark Ash, a member of the Circulation Committee, has offered annually a prize of $100 to the librarian of the Branch maintained in the best general condition. This prize was awarded in 1915 to Miss Ida Simpson, Librarian of the 96th Street Branch. A list of previous awards will be found in the Annual Report for 1914.

EXHIBITIONS

Collections of the paintings of Bible scenes by Tissot, presented to the Library in 1909 by Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, have been on exhibition at various Branches throughout the year. Other loan exhibitions include paintings of marine scenes lent to the George Bruce Branch by Frederick Waugh; the collection of paintings lent to the Riverside Branch by Freeman Clarke; a collection of etchings by Frank Brangwyn at the Woodstock Branch lent by M. Knoedler and Company; an exhibition of pictures of modern art works at the 58th Street Branch, and exhibitions of pictures lent by the Metropolitan Museum of Art at the Yorkville, St. Agnes, and other Branches. There were loan exhibitions of works relating to Thomas Hardy and to Charles Dickens at the Washington Heights Branch.

NEW BUILDING AND ALTERATION

The new building of the George Bruce Branch at 78 Manhattan Street was opened June 2, 1915. The opening exercises included addresses by Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, of the Board of Trustees, the Hon. Henry Bruère, Chamberlain of the City of New York, and the Hon. William D. Brush, Alderman of the district. This Branch was presented by Miss Catharine Wolf Bruce, in memory of her father, George Bruce, to the New York Free Circulating Library in 1888, and was originally situated on West 42nd Street. Owing to the erection of the West 40th Street Branch and the opening of the Central Circulation Branch in the Central Building at Fifth avenue and 42nd street, it seemed better to move the George Bruce Branch to some part of the Borough of Manhattan where there were no library facilities. The proceeds of the sale of the old Branch paid for the new building and site in the Manhattanville district. The first floor of the new building contains the adult circulation department and the reading and reference rooms; the second floor, the children's room, with sections for both circulation and reading rooms. There is an assembly room in the basement. The building is of colonial design, having a façade of brick with stone trimmings. The architects were Carrière and Hastings.

A fifteen-foot addition was built on the north side of the Tremont Branch at 1866 Washington avenue, The Bronx. A large increase of work made this a necessity, as the Branch is second in number of books lent. The floor-space was enlarged for public use, an assembly-room and administrative offices were added.

CONCLUSION

There are, perhaps, some people who still think of a library as a place frequented only by those who are engaged in "delving into the past," as a storehouse in which pedants spend their days examining "musty records." A large amount of scholarly research is, in fact, conducted in The New York Public Library — and that is one of the principal justifications for its existence. But to suppose that such an institution does not respond to the interests of the day, does not reflect the thoughts and deeds of the world about it, is to be ignorant of the facts.

The effect of the great War upon the Library is a typical example of this quick response to events in the world of action. The War, of course, is having its influence upon ethics, upon religion, upon politics, upon commerce, and upon art and literature. There is no Division, no Branch of the Library where this fact is not apparent. It enters into the daily work of every member of the Staff. The reports in the preceding pages, give some idea of how the Library is called upon to answer inquiries — geographical, scientific, military, political — which arise from this most tremendous event of modern history. New industries are arising in this country, new commercial and economic conditions have to be considered. The resources of the Library are constantly searched for information and advice about these subjects. The demands upon the Library are going to increase rather than diminish. The perplexing questions arising from the War, and the debate about national defence, indicate the absolute need for sources of information through which the people may keep informed on every aspect of these imminent problems. Herein is one of the Library's opportunities.

Respectfully submitted,

E. H. ANDERSON,

Director.

BUILDING SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT

FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31, 1915

Increases in the number of visitors and in the Staff have forced us to increase the seating capacity of several rooms, and to enlarge our checking room facilities. Galleries were added in the Americana rooms, as well as a large number of desks, clothes lockers, shelves, catalogue cases and electric lights in other parts of the building, and additional lunch and rest room facilities for the Staff in another building on 40th street.

There were 2,558,717 visitors in the building, or 178,000 more than in 1914. The cost of light, heat, power and janitor's service, including gallery attendants and policing of the building, amounted to $77,384.28 as against $84,107.70 for the year before. The cost of repairs and alterations amounted to $36,600.00 as against $48,500.00 for the year before. There were, on an average, 100 employes on our monthly pay-roll, the grand total of which amounted to $71,672.73 as against $73,555.73 for the year before.

REPAIR DIVISION

Last year's allowance for repairs was $36,600.00. To a casual observer this may seem enough, since apparently all important repairs were made; but the comments of experts prove that much of our woodwork requires waxing, iron work needs to be scraped and painted, elevator shafts ought to be overhauled, etc. All of this had to be neglected on account of the lack of funds. The total number of small repairs amounted to 4,852. Of these 4,728 were made in response to complaints; while 124 were planned improvements. The following were the most noteworthy improvements: Balconies, bookcases and stairs in the Americana rooms, $8,000.00; an air washing system, $1,200.00; new grate bars for three boilers, $800.00; new sump pump, $600.00; forced draft system for the boilers, $2,000.00.

The cost of the engineering and supervising work for the repair division, borne by the Library, amounted to $1,800.00.

ENGINEERING DIVISION

The total cost of generating light, heat and power was $25,157.89, of which $12,182.83 was for coal burned and removal of ashes, $1,413.25 for oil, repair material and storage battery repairs, and $11,561.81 for labor and office expenses. Making an allowance for the heating of the building, the actual cost to the Library for electric current would be 1.05 cents per kilowatt hour. This represents a cash expenditure.

JANITOR'S DIVISION

The janitor's division includes the cleaning, policing and watching of the building. The total cost of labor and material was $44,058.14 for the past year as against $43,881.77 for the year before. The cost of cleaning per square foot per year was 4.7 cents, or the same as last year, the increase in the total cost being due to the employment of an additional attendant to protect the property which visitors leave in the building.

The chart below gives a graphic illustration of the amount of money spent for coal each month for the past two years. In the beginning of 1914 we spent about $1,600.00 per month; comparing this with 1915, it appears that a saving of $200.00 to $700.00 per month has been effected. Credit is due to the personnel of the engineer's force, the Holly system, and the new forced draft system which latter enabled us to burn a cheaper grade of coal. The lower chart illustrates the increase of the amount of electric current used per month during the same period.

TABLE OF STATISTICS, SUMMARIZED

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

Many of the libraries of the United States, The New York Public Library among them, have agreed to the recommendations of a committee of the American Library Association to print in their annual reports a table of statistics, summarized, for purposes of comparison and reference. The table, with the figures for this Library, is given herewith. It should be clearly understood that this table applies only to the Circulation Department, and not to the Reference Department of the Library.

EXHIBITION OF WOOD ENGRAVINGS

THE recent death of Alexander Wilson Drake was the occasion of a memorial exhibition by the Art and Prints Division of the Library. It was opened in the Stuart Gallery on February 10. Excepting some biographical notes relating to Mr. Drake, the exhibition consisted of wood engravings by well-known masters of the art in America connected with Mr. Drake's time and activity. It was fittingly introduced by some of the earliest examples of the technique of the so-called "new school"; J. G. Smithwick's "Drumming out a Tory," after C. S. Reinhart, published in February, 1877, and Timothy Cole's "Gillie boy" which appeared in August of the same year. Especially interesting, from both the technical and historical standpoint, is Frederick Juengling's "Engineer crossing the chasm over the Rimac" which was published in Scribner's in 1877. A brilliant array of engravings appeared in the twenty years after 1875. Among the engravers whose work constituted the glory of this period were Timothy Cole, Henry Wolf, Gustav Kruell, T. Johnson, Frank French, J. G. Smithwick, Putnam, J. W. Evans, Aikman, E. Heinemann, F. H. Wellington, and J. H. E. Whitney. They were all represented in characteristic examples. The exhibition thus formed a tribute to the memory of one whose influence in the field of wood engraving and book illustration was so very strong in the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Dancaster, Ernest A. Limes & cements; their nature, manufacture and use; an elementary treatise. London: C. Lockwood and Son, 1916. xii, 212 p. illus. 12°.

An up-to-date book of over 200 pages based upon Burnell's Limes, cements, mortars, etc. Has a good bibliography, also chapters on waterproofing, efflorescence, stucco, bituminous and oleaginous cements, chemical analysis, and physical and mechanical testing.

"The author describes it as an elementary treatise, and such it is in that it does not deal exhaustively with the subject, especially the processes and machinery of manufacture; but the basic information upon which a thorough appreciation of the nature and properties of limes and cements depends is so well presented that the book will prove quite valuable to engineers and architects, or others who have to deal with the materials in question. The misconceptions in regard to the hydraulic properties of limes and cements which resulted from the very imperfect knowledge of earlier days have persisted up to the present in the minds of many users of these materials, often as the result of not having access to a clear and up-to-date summary of ascertained facts. Analysis and physical and mechanical testing have played an important part in cement work of late years, and have elucidated many points; but there is still much to be learned on the subject. In the meantime, to those who wish to take up the study of limes and cements, Mr. Dancaster's book can be recommended as a very good introduction."—Iron & coal trades review, Nov. 12, 1915, p. 606.

Ditmar, Rudolf. Die Technologie des Kautschuks. Wien: A. Hartleben, 1915. viii, 600 p. illus. 8°.

VMV

A comprehensive work of nearly 600 pages by the proprietor of an authorized testing laboratory at Graetz, Austria. Deals with the gathering and preparation of the rubber, factory plans and machinery, reclamation, rubber substitutes and rubber fabrics, with details of the manufacture of hard and soft goods. Completely illustrated and well supplied with references to patents.

Reviewed in India rubber world, Dec., 1915, p. 123.

Ernst, Wilhelm. Text book of milk hygiene. Authorized translation with annotations and revisions, by Dr. John R. Mohler... and Dr. Adolph Eichhorn... Chicago: A. Eger, 1914. 2 p.l., vii-x, 281 p., 5 pl. illus. 8°.

VQP

A timely and up-to-date technical manual for veterinarians and inspectors by the director of the Royal Milk Control Station at Munich, Germany. Emphasizes the formation, procurement, and character of milk, especially as regards contamination. That part of the German edition dealing with milk regulations has been replaced by a chapter on the conditions and standards in the United States. Does not discuss such specific questions as "the preparation of certain milk mixtures for the feeding of infants, the advantages of feeding cows' milk to infants, and the action of a milk diet in the treatment of adults..."

"The chemical and physical properties of milk are only discussed to an extent deemed necessary to instruct the veterinary experts in court cases in judging physiological, pathological and external influences.

Since the chemical examination of milk should be placed in the hands of the food chemist, I have eliminated the analytical examination of milk and the examination for preservatives. For this information I would recommend the numerous publications which have appeared during recent times, as for instance, the works of Grimmer and Sommerfeld, Teichert, Utz and Berthel. Only those methods have been described which may be undertaken by the veterinarian and which are sufficient for thorough preliminary test for milk adulterations."—From the preface.

Gardner, Walter Myers, editor. The British coal-tar industry; its origin, development, and decline. London: Williams & Norgate, 1915. ix, 436 p., 1 l. tables. illus. 8°.

VOF

"The chemical industry and in particular that branch concerned with coal-tar derivatives, has, owing to the war, been recognized by the British public to an unprecedented degree. This does not involve adequate comprehension and appreciation, but merely the fact that hitherto, except in scientific circles, chemistry and chemist have been two words associated almost entirely with pharmacy and drugs. Perhaps the press and platform discussions of the past year have enlightened some of the densest of the ignorance abounding on the subject, but in many directions the result has been to impart the little learning that is so dangerous a thing. Certainly most of us have heard put forward panaceas for the shortage of dyestuffs and fine chemicals which would never have found expression had their authors any more substantial insight into the industry than that gained by perusal of the newspapers, or if they had ever known of the existence of it in the days before its transference in greater part to Germany.

"For these and for many other reasons we hope that the collection of papers constituting the volume which Professor Gardner has just published will be widely read. It consists of the chief lectures and addresses given in this country on the subject since the establishment of the industry by Perkin up to the present day. They are given in chronological order, and the first twenty-two deal with the history and development of the industry, the remainder dealing with the problem presented since the outbreak of war. They can be read with interest and profit by the man-in-the-street, as well as by the chemist, and will serve to show that more than one factor enters into the problem of the British coal-tar industry, its decline and perhaps its recovery. The papers commence with the Cantor lectures delivered in 1868 by Perkin himself on the aniline or coal-tar colours, and conclude with Professor Perkin's presidential address to the Chemical Society this year."—Chemical trade journal, Oct. 23, 1915, p. 389.

Goldingham, Arthur Hugh. Marine and stationary Diesel engines described and illustrated, with numerous original formulae for their design and instructions for installation and operation. New York: Spon & Chamberlain, 1915. xx, 206 p., 8 diags., 2 pl. tables. illus. 12°.

VFM

"In the Palace of Machinery at the Panama-Pacific Exposition a 500-hp. Diesel engine, direct connected to a 250 kw. generator, was run for 10 months at a cost of 68 cents per hour. Crude California oil was used as fuel for this engine. Since 1892, when the late Rudolph Diesel invented this type of prime-mover, its use has spread to power plants both on land and sea with success. There are now many manufacturers of Diesel engines, each claiming certain advantages for its particular patented improvements. In the United States there are eight works producing them. Their operation is becoming better understood, and when their low fuel consumption, labor, small area, and output are considered, the engine is without doubt highly efficient. Numerous papers have been prepared on the subject of the Diesel, but this is probably the first time that a practical treatise has been prepared of value to all grades of engineers. All existing literature has been studied and drawn upon, including leading engineering journals, and several well-known makers were consulted. The work is copiously illustrated, the author being able to secure drawings, photographs, and sectional views of nearly all the principal Diesel engines made. Indicator cards from actual operation are given. The book is really worth while. — Mining & scientific press, Dec. 11, 1915, p. 913.

Hamilton, Douglas Thomas, and F. D. JONES. Advanced grinding practice; a treatise on precision grinding methods and the equipment used in modern grinding practice. New York: Industrial Press, 1915. viii, 344 p. tables. illus. 8°. VFG

"The modern grinding wheel, when properly selected for the work upon which it is used, is very efficient, especially for the finishing of accurate work. The developments made in the manufacture of grinding wheels within the past few years have greatly assisted in placing the grinding machine in a class with other highly productive tools and have made possible great decreases in manufacturing costs." — p. 212.

This well illustrated work of nearly 350 pages by the associate editor of Machinery treats in a clear and definite manner of the use of such machinery, rather than of its construction. Discusses cylindrical, form, internal, cylinder, surface, crankshaft and camshaft, and disk grinding, with chapters on abrasives and bonding processes, selection of wheels, truing devices, and methods of holding the work.

Hool, George A. Reinforced concrete construction. Volume III, Bridges & culverts: prepared in the Extension Division of the University of Wisconsin by George A. Hool, S.B. . . . assisted by Frank C. Thiesen. . . . with chapters by A. W. Ransome, Leslie H. Allen, Wm. J. Titus, Albert M. Wolf, Philip Aylett and P. J. Markmann, and articles by A. C. Janni and S. W. Bowen. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, Inc., 1916. xxii, 688 p. illus. 1. ed. 8°. (Engineering education series.) VEOM

Nearly 700 pages of carefully prepared text and copious illustrations — the third of a series of four volumes on the general subject of reinforced concrete construction and designed primarily for correspondence study in the Extension Division of the University of Wisconsin. "An attempt is made to meet the needs of the students by omitting intricate mathematical analyses involving the calculus; by avoiding mathematical sign language wherever it is found possible; and by including complete methods of design of both symmetrical and unsymmetrical arches, not only of single span, but of multiple spans with elastic piers."

Has sections on construction plant (Ransome), estimating (Allen), artistic design (Titus), European concrete bridges (Aylett and Markmann) and construction in detail of several types of bridges (Wolf) including the Yardley bridge over the Delaware river, and the famous Tunkhannock viaduct of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railway.

"The book gives the most comprehensive and best treatment of reinforced concrete bridges in print." — Engineering & contracting, Jan. 19, 1916, p. 74.

Kapper, F. Overhead transmission lines and distributing circuits; their design and construction. Translated by P. R. Friedlaender. . . . London: Constable & Co., Ltd., 1915. x, 300 p. diagr. illus. 4°. VGM

Designed for practicing and student engineers and based largely upon German practice, although the translator has introduced English weights and measures. Its twenty-seven chapters cover in a thoroughly practical manner the subjects of conductors, line sag, supports, insulation, earthing, crossings, surveying, economical length of span, agreements with contractors, local distribution systems, tools and appliances, and overhead regulations of the Board of Trade (English) and of the Verband deutscher Elektrotechniker.

"The main object. . . is to explain fundamental principles and give data essential to the proper execution of the varied duties falling to the lot of the engineer engaged in modern overhead line construction and maintenance. This aim is very well fulfilled. Numerous worked examples, mostly from practice, are included to supplement the text and illustrate the application of formulae. The scope of calculations seems to be carried far enough to cover the direct practical requirements of designer and constructor, and no further. The whole work may, therefore, be read with profit by the average student or older engineer interested in this branch of engineering. The author writes from the mechanical standpoint, and no information is included concerning electrical design, pressure surges, corona, etc." — Electrical review, London, Dec. 31, 1915, p. 841.

Moyer, J. A., and J. P. CALDERWOOD. Engineering thermodynamics. New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1915. viii, 203 p. diagrs. 8°. VFN

"For years there has been an important demand for a text-book on thermodynamics which would be brief and concise, but at the same time so clearly written as regards explanation that students of average ability in our large technical schools could read it without difficulty. A professor of thermodynamics wrote recently as follows: 'I like the idea of making the text largely self-explanatory'. . . . This book has been prepared to meet this demand and in writing it the authors have kept in mind these requirements." — Preface.

Authors are professors of mechanical engineering in The Pennsylvania State College.

Newmark, Jacob Harmon. Automobile business; a guide: helpful, inspirational, and suggestive. Detroit, Mich.: Automobile Pub. Co. [1915.] vi p., 1 l., 201 p. illus. 12°. TON

"The field is not overcrowded anywhere. The industry is still young and there is plenty of room for those who are willing to work." — p. 13.

This little book of heart-to-heart advice tells briefly about the different phases of the business — opportunities, choice of territory, organization, selection of cars, salesmen, advertising, prices, garage operation, service, second hand cars, commercial and electric cars, etc.

Pagé, Victor Wilfred. Automobile repairing made easy, shop methods — equipment — processes; a complete treatise explaining approved methods of repairing all parts of all types of gasoline automobiles. . . . New York: The N. W. Henley Pub. Co., 1916. 1060 p. illus. 8°. TON as a repair man. Tells about the shop and its equipment, and in addition to describing the ordinary repair operations, deals with such special processes as oxy-acetylene welding, treatment of steel, soldering, etc. Well provided with useful mathematical and mechanical tables.

"The practical all-around automobile repair man must not only understand machine work and metal-working tools of all kinds, but he must also possess some of the knowledge of the electrician, plumber, wood-worker, rubber-worker, tinsmith and blacksmith. It is the purpose of the writer to outline the essentials of automobile repairing in a way that will be understood by all with ordinary mechanical ability." — Preface.

Spencer, Albert S. The practical design of steel-framed sheds. London: Constable & Co., Ltd., 1915. xv, 163(1) p., 12 diagrs. tables. 8°. VEH

The use of this book presupposes an intimate knowledge of the theory of structures and of practical designing. Deals with the structure as a whole (including the foundation), rather than with the details of the various units.

Travelers Insurance Company, Hartford, Conn. A treatise on safety engineering as applied to scaffolds. Hartford, Conn.: Travelers Insurance Co. [1915.] 1 p.l., vi, 354 p. illus. 8°. VEC

American books and references on this subject have been devoted mainly to special scaffolds and have emphasized the efficiency of the workman rather than his safety. This book, describing American practice from the latter standpoint, should prove of great value to bricklayers, carpenters, painters, decorators and others working at considerable heights. Has information on sidewalk protection and is provided with over 100 excellent illustrations.

Reviewed in Power, Jan. 18, 1916, p. 97, and in Building age, Jan., 1916, p. 64.

Upton, George Burr. The structure and properties of the more common materials of construction. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. v., 327 p. illus. 1. ed. 8°. VEE

Largely theoretical and based upon a laboratory course given to the juniors in Sibley College, Cornell University. The first part deals with the determination of the properties of materials by means of engineering testing, no attempt having been made to give collections of data on the results of tests, although there is an attempt to teach how to interpret and criticize results. The second part deals with the nature and control of the internal structure of materials. The principles of physical chemistry are presented simply and with helpful diagrams. Certain parts of the book are stated to be new, the details of which have not before appeared in print.

"The form and presentation of the subject and its analytic treatment give the book distinct value as a text." — Engineering & contracting, Jan. 19, 1916, p. 73.

Willard, William Clyde. Maintenance of way and structures. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1915. xxi, 451 p., 1 diagr., 1 table. illus. 1. ed. 8°. TPD

"This track-mileage [of North America] would girdle the earth seventeen times... One person out of each fifty-one was [in 1910] directly supported by the railways... Some idea can be had of the vast amount of work required and the importance of this work of maintenance, from the fact that almost one-third of all railway employees are on the work of maintenance of way and structures... In the past the work of maintenance was generally in the hands of a practical man who had worked up from the section-gang. The tendency at present is, however, to recognize more and more the engineering importance of the work and the necessity of placing experienced and trained engineers in charge of it. These men, who understand not only the practical side of the work but also the basic engineering principles, today are taking the place of the old time practical road-master." — From the introduction.

Mr. Willard's carefully written and richly illustrated book of 451 pages treats of principles and theory in such a way as to interest both the engineer and the university student. Cites representative examples by reference to the practice of individual railways, covering such subjects as organization, roadway, ballast, ties, timber preservation, rails, signs, fences, highway crossings, track accessories, bridges, trestles, culverts, switches, frogs, turnouts, work of the department, roadway machines, tools, records, accounts, and suggestions for an annual programme.

Zenneck, Jonathan Adolf Wilhelm. Wireless telegraphy. Translated from the German, by A. E. Seelig... New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1915. xx, 443 p. illus. 1. ed. 8°. TTF

"Zenneck" — the well-known German authority now done into English from the second edition (1912). Completely illustrated and provided with a most excellent bibliography.

"This translation into English of Professor Zenneck's Lehrbuch, the classic of radio telegraphic literature, is sure to be welcomed. Although many of the interrelations of electrical quantities are stated mathematically and in such form as to make a knowledge of the calculus desirable, nearly all these statements are explained so clearly that even the student who possesses only slight acquaintance with electrical matters can find much information in useful form. The book is thorough, and the radio reader will find as he advances in his work he will get out more and more as he rereads it...

"This American edition is especially well printed and sets a high mark to be reached by other technical publications. As a reference work alone, recording and describing accomplishments in the radio arts, the book should be extremely useful to radio-engineers. As a text for a thorough course in both theory and operation of radio instruments its value can scarcely be overrated. Since the treatment is almost entirely a matter of facts undisputed by real authorities, the tendency to favor German workers on historical points may easily be overlooked in view of the importance of their technical work." — Popular science monthly, New York, Jan., 1916, p. 153-154.

Also reviewed in Electrical world, Dec. 4, 1915, p. 1270.

Bragdon, Claude Fayette. Projective ornament. Rochester, N. Y.: The Manas Press, 1915. 6 p.l., 78 p., 1 l., 1 pl. illus. 8°. MLC

A theory of design on a basis of "geometric source," which is "richest in promise."

"Mr. Bragdon is known through lectures and publications which have always carried evidence of a deeper form of expression and the development of a new form of language through the medium of the arts. Today, we find no originality based on sound fundamentals but rather the style of a building is determined not by necessity, but by the whim of the designer and is made up of borrowings and survivals." — Architecture, Nov., 1915.

THE PRINT COLLECTION OF

BY CHARLES ALLEN MUNN

OF the many collectors of American engravings with whom it has been my good fortune to have a personal acquaintance, there are two who have stood out above all others as possessing a superlative knowledge of the subject of American engravings, — David McN. Stauffer and E. B. Holden. Both of these gentlemen fortunately achieved the pleasurable tasks which they had mapped out for their leisure moments.

Mr. Holden formed a collection of Washington engravings and of New York views which, at the time of his death, was the best private collection in this country. Besides this, he owned a fine library of Americana. By good fortune the work upon which Mr. Stauffer had spent so many years of his life (American Engravers on Copper and Steel) was completed and published before his death. This is almost a pioneer work, in that it gives a practically complete list of the work of American engravers. Not only does it contain a complete list of all engravings, known at that time, by each American engraver, but, in a separate volume, there is a brief biography of the men who, whether well known or little known, have by their achievement in the art of engraving helped to make the history of that art in this country. It has been the good fortune of The New York Public Library to receive as a gift Mr. Stauffer's collection of prints, which was of inestimable service to him in the preparation of his book.

David McNeely Stauffer was a modest man, unpretentious, of extraordinary patience and perseverance. The collection which he has left behind him is symbolical of him and his methods. It cannot be termed great, in that it includes the notable and rarer examples of the artists represented. It was evidently the ambition of this collector to obtain specimens of the different type of work in which each artist had specialized, rather than to obtain the more important or rarer examples of such work.

Tracing the history and development of the art of engraving in this country, the Stauffer Collection will be found to be of immense value to the Library. In the number of artists represented it is wonderfully complete, and Mr. Stauffer did not hesitate to acquire the most modest examples of each artist's work, and has thereby preserved some specimens of engraving, such as small private plates, bill heads, cards of various kinds, and other items of unimportance which to-day it would be almost impossible to collect. The larger and more important examples may be looked for in the Emmet Collection, or elsewhere in the Library.

In making a record of the work of any particular artist this collector did not hesitate, when engravings were lacking, to include in his collection photographs or photogravures or any process reproductions. These he included evidently for the purpose of record only, and in this particular they serve an important and useful purpose.

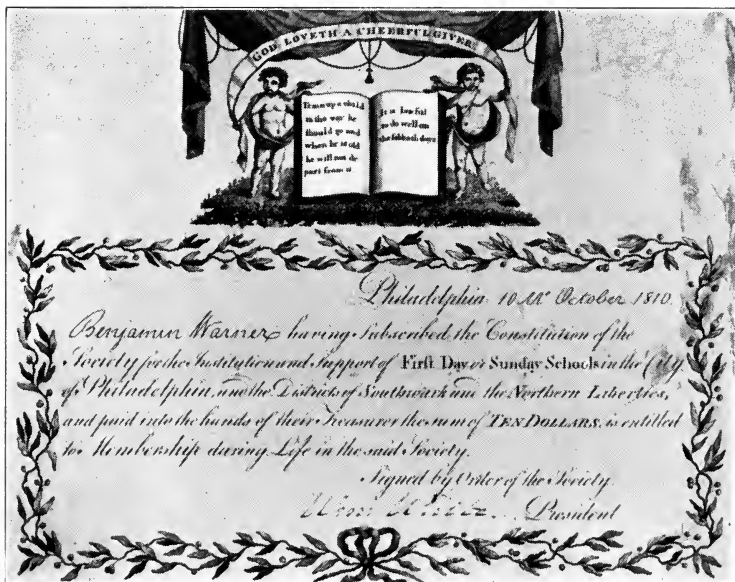

Probably the most complete and important part of the collection is the set of engravings by J. B. Longacre. Mr. Stauffer took infinite pains in forming this set, and it is doubtless the most complete in this country, with the exception of one private collection. He was a great admirer of Longacre and his work, and he has included in the collection a photographic reproduction of a portrait of Longacre, which he had prepared after a daguerreotype, especially out of compliment to the artist, and as an important adjunct to the collection. A large number of prints are in proof state. A number of them are in several states, and they are almost without exception in excellent condition. These will be found of immense interest to the student.

It would be idle to mention the names of the various engravers who are represented. Many of the Edwin prints are very attractive, and there are a number of examples of this artist's work. There are also a large number of prints by Thomas Gimbrede. There are many portraits from the Portfolio engravings, by Haines; Eckstein and Cone are represented, as well as many others.

It must be understood, moreover, that Mr. Stauffer was not satisfied with a superficial examination of the prints which he described. I have never seen anyone more painstaking. In transcribing the title of a print, no dot or comma or peculiar lettering escaped his eagle eye, and he endeavored to note every such peculiarity that would be of interest to the collector. His own personal copy of his book, which forms a part of the Library's collection, is interleaved for the purpose of annotation and interlineation. Although the author died only a dozen years or so after its publication, it is surprising to see the extent of the notes, annotations, corrections and memoranda which he had made, either for his own use or possibly for a future edition. American Engravers on Copper and Steel is so complete that it is hardly likely anybody would undertake the publication of a similar book for many years to come. Should another book on this subject ever be undertaken, Mr. Stauffer's will have to be consulted as a foundation for the study. The Library is certainly to be congratulated upon the acquisition of this collection.

GIFTS

DURING the month of March the Library received as gifts a total of 1,821 volumes, 4,804 pamphlets, 11 maps, and 16 prints. The following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of these gifts: From the American Alpine Club was received, as a deposit for an indefinite period, its collection of works on mountaineering, containing 52 volumes, 39 pamphlets, 52 periodicals, 1 photograph, 1 portrait, and 1 poster.

From Mr. Robert H. Benson of Chicago we received a copy of the privately printed "Catalogue of Italian pictures at 16, South Street, Park Lane, London and Buckhurst in Sussex, collected by Robert and Evelyn Benson," London, 1914; from Mr. Jan V. Chelminski of New York, Number 43 of 1000 copies printed of "L'Armée du Duché de Varsovie par Jan V. Chelminski, texte par le Commandant A. Malibrant, ancien chef d'escadron d'artillerie," Paris, 1913; from Mr. H. C. Levis of London, a copy of the privately printed work, "Nicolaus Claudius Fabricius, Lord of Peiresc, called Peireskius," London, 1916; from the Argentine Commission to the Panama Pacific International Exposition, 105 volumes relating to the Argentine Republic; from Mr. Harrington Putnam of Brooklyn, 31 volumes on travel and mountaineering; and from Mr. Howard Townsend of New York, a collection of autograph letters and manuscripts, in continuation of his previous gifts of Bayard papers and containing 44 letters, 7 manuscript lists, and 1 map.

Mrs. F. O. C. Darley of Claymont, Delaware, gave the Library a portfolio containing 13 character sketches from the works of Charles Dickens, by F. O. C. Darley; and Mr. McDougall Hawkes of New York, an early, uncatalogued state of the lithograph "La Muse" by Fantin-Latour.

From Hon. Joseph H. Choate of New York we received 80 volumes, 335 pamphlets, and 2 maps, comprising reports of institutions, government documents, and publications relating to the present war; from Mr. F. T. Marinetti of Milan, 4 volumes and 7 pamphlets, all in Italian and in reference to the Futuristic movement; from Mrs. Wm. A. Perry of New York, 57 volumes and 2 pamphlets, consisting of engineering publications; and from Mr. Frederick G. Potter of New York, 20 bound volumes of the Financial Review, the American Church Review, and the Church Review.

ADDITIONS AND USE OF LIBRARY DURING MARCH, 1916

DURING the month of March, 1916, there were received at the Library 31,107 volumes and 9,310 pamphlets. (These figures include the additions to both Reference and Circulation Departments.) The total number of readers in the Central Building was 82,371. They consulted 214,400 volumes. Visitors to the building numbered 225,547.

One of the best Russian periodicals. Founded in 1836, by the poet A. Pushkin, as a quarterly. Pushkin published only 4 volumes. In 1837 the periodical came into the possession of Prince P. Vyazemski, V. Zhukovski, A. Kravevski and P. Pletnev. It became a monthly in 1843. In 1847 the poet N. Nekrassov and I. Panayev became the editors and publishers. They continued it until 1866 when it was suspended by the censor after the fourth number. The best writers of the period before and after the Crimean war, Turgenev, Goncharov, Byelinski, Gertzen, Grigorovich, Chernyshevski, Dobrolyubov, Ostrovski, etc., were, among its constant contributors. The periodical is now very rare and the Library is trying to get a complete file.

A complete set of this valuable and rare periodical which appeared in London and Geneva from 1857 to 1869. Its editor and publisher was the famous publicist Alexander Gertzen (known in English and German literature as Herzen). Although forbidden by the censorship it had a large circulation among the intellectual classes of Russia, and was read by the Emperors Nicholas I. and Alexander II. Its influence upon the latter is supposed to have hastened his action in emancipating the serfs. An important feature of the set is that it contains all the French and Russian supplements up to 1869. V. P. Baturinski in his work, A. N. Gertzen, ego družya i znakomyye, St. Petersburg, 1904, p. 292, says: "The complete set of Kolokol appears to be a bibliographical rarity. You cannot find it even in such European libraries as the Bibliothèque Nationale of Paris or the British Museum, this latter, notwithstanding the fact that the Kolokol has for a long time been published in London." Since that time, however, the British Museum has completed its file by all the supplements.

*РВИ

The most popular periodical for the Jews in Russia, with progressive tendencies, and in favor of amalgamation. Established in 1881 by Adolph E. Landau. In 1882 a weekly supplement was added under the title Nedyelnaya Khronika Voskhoda, later called Voskhod. This supplement was suspended in 1906. From 1893 to 1899 S. O. Gruzenberg was the editor. In 1899 the Voskhod came under control of a circle of Russo-Jewish writers and M. Syrkin was appointed editor. From 1899 to 1902 the supplement appeared twice a week. It became a little more national. In 1891 the Voskhod was suspended by the government for six months; in 1903 nos. 16 and 17 were confiscated; in 1904 the weekly was again suspended by the government for six months.

The Voskhod published many original works and articles relating to the history of the Jews in Russia. Among its most prominent contributors may be mentioned A. Harkavy, S. Bershadski, S. Dubnov, I. Kulisher, M. Mysh, V. Nikitin, and L. Levanda.

Восходъ, и позже Ежедневная хроника Восхода. Ред. А. Е. Ландау и М. Г. Сыркинь. Годъ 1882-1906 (но. 1-26). С.-Петербургъ, 1882-1906. f°.

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Bligh, William George. Dams and weirs; an analytical and practical treatise on gravity dams and weirs; arch and buttress dams; submerged weirs; and barrages. Chicago: American Technical Society, 1915. 4 p.l., 206 p., 3 l. illus. 8°. VDP

"All of this progress in the design of dams and weirs, however, has served to multiply the types of design and has increased the need for an authoritative and up-to-date treatise on the theoretical and practical questions involved. The author of this work has been a designing engineer for more than a generation and has built dams and weirs in India, Egypt, Canada, and in this country. He is, therefore, abundantly qualified to speak, not only from the historic side of the work but from the modern practical side as well. In addition to a careful analysis of each different type of profile, he has given critical studies of the examples of this type, showing the good and bad points of the designs." — From the introduction.

Bolton, Reginald Pelham. Power for profit; principles governing the use of machinery and labor in modern buildings. New York: De Vinne Press, 1915. 3 p.l., 3-209 p. tables. 4°. VFG

The installation and maintenance of mechanical and electrical necessities and conveniences in modern buildings are often, by reason of waste and demands on the part of tenants, such as to make the investment less remunerative than it should be. Mr. Bolton, who is an authority on the subject of building management, has written this book for the owner who desires to count the cost, and to know in general the principles which govern the economical relations of power and labor, with something about the relative advantages of public and private service.

Reviewed in Engineering news, Feb. 17, 1916, p. 319.

Bottler, Max. Die Trockenmittel in der Lack-, Firnis- und Farbenindustrie. Halle (Saale): Verlag von W. Knapp, 1915. 3 p.l., 66 p. 8°. VOP

Treats of the drying materials used in the varnish and color industries — referring to the old established materials such as the lead, manganese, zinc, and chalk compounds, as well as to the later developments in the use of cobalt. Has a section on drying extracts and fluid driers. Well provided with references to more complete discussions of the various materials.

Chalkley, Alfred Philip. Diesel engines for land and marine work. With an introductory chapter by the late Dr. Rudolph Diesel... London: Constable & Co., Ltd., 1914. xvii(i), 368 p., 39 diags., 10 pl. illus. 4. ed., rev. and enlarged. 8°. VFM

Second complete revision of this important work, with the bulk of the new material relating to the marine applications of this wonderfully efficient engine. Has a new chapter on design. A practical book, attractively illustrated with half-tones and line drawings, and devoid of troublesome mathematics. The appendix contains Lloyd's rules for internal combustion marine engines; also a copy of the original patent specification dated August 27, 1892.

Selected, classified, and re-edited material by many authors from the columns of the Engineering and mining journal for the period July 1, 1912 to July 1, 1915 — continuing the Handbook of mining details published in 1912.

Reviewed in Mining and scientific press, March 11, 1916.

Ennis, William Duane. Applied thermodynamics for engineers. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1915. xi, 503 p. diagr. 4. ed., corrected. 8°. VFN

Fourth edition of this practical and exceptionally clear exposition represents considerable expansion and revision — notably: a brief study of gas and vapor mixtures; an analysis of the gas-engine cycle, taking account of the various specific heats of the gases; pressure turbines; results of engine tests; a new method of design for compound engines; Orrok's condenser constants; Clayton's studies of cylinder action; the Humphrey internal combustion pump; the Stumpf uniflow engine; the applications of the law of gases to ordnance and to balloon construction; and the Tyler method of solving exponential equations by hyperbolic functions. The work is well supplied with practical problems, many with answers.

Greenly, Henry. Model engineering; a guide to model workshop practice, with working drawings of engines, boilers, rolling stock, cannon, electric machines, etc. London: Cassell and Co., Ltd. [1915.] vi p., 1 l., 407(1) p. illus. 8°. (Cassell's handcraft library.) VFG

Every boy of "a mechanical turn of mind" should take delight and learn a great deal from this practical, instructive, and richly illustrated work. Describes, in detail, shop, tools, and the various processes. Besides the models mentioned in the above title, the book has chapters on model internal combustion engines, locomotives, and railways, as well as descriptions of model cranes, portable engines, steam hammers, and boats. The working drawings are done with great care.

Hall, Albert Neely. Home-made toys for girls and boys; wooden and cardboard toys, mechanical and electrical toys. With ... illustrations and working-drawings by the author and Norman P. Hall. London: T. W. Laurie, Ltd. [1915.] xii, 217 p., 12 pl. diagsr. 8°. VNR

Instructive, entertaining, well-illustrated and simply written directions for making inexpensive toys from material picked up around the house — wind-mills, kites, aeroplanes, motor-boats, water-motors, railways, elevators, tops, shooting galleries, doll-houses, stables, cigar-box toys, spool toys, and a reflectoscope.

Harding, Charles Francis. Electric railway engineering, [by] C. Francis Harding ... assisted by Dressel D. Ewing... New

York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. 2 p.l., vii-xv, 416 p., 2 diagrs. illus. 2. ed., rev., enlarged and reset. 8°. TPYM

A gathering of considerable scattered material on present-day theory and practice, and although devoid of higher mathematics, is designed for a senior elective course in a technical university. Embraces the history of electric traction, the principles of train operation (including traffic studies), power generation and distribution, equipment, and types of systems. The second edition, which is considerably revised, has a new chapter on locomotive train haulage, also more than 50 additional illustrations.

Hendrickson, A. V. The gas chemists' summary, 1914. London: W. King, 1915. 4 p.l., 167 p. illus. 8°. VOL

Practically consists of abstracts of 147 articles and papers as gleaned from six prominent gas and chemical periodicals for the year 1914. A handy little book for the busy gas chemist who desires tabloid information concerning recent developments in carbonization, condensation, washing, purification, naphthalene and cyanogen extraction, tar and ammonia, oil and carburetted water-gas, photometry and calorimetry, gaseous heating and ventilation, gas analysis, and tests.

"Accordingly, the only satisfactory manner in which such information may be collected is that of issuing periodical volumes on the lines of Strache's handbook, which has for some time appeared annually in Germany. Hendrickson, in his first volume, struck out quite a new line in the gas literature of this country, and his Summary has already proved its value to an industry in which little up-to-date material is obtainable in book form. The second volume, lately issued by the publishers, follows closely on the heels of its predecessor, and furnishes a compact record of chemical and scientific development during the year 1914."—Gas world, Sept. 25, 1915.

Also reviewed in Journal of the Society of Chemical Industry, Sept. 15, 1915.

Huettig, Valerius. Heizungs- und Lüftungsanlagen in Fabriken, mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der Abwärmeverwertung bei Wärmekraftmaschinen. Leipzig: O. Spamer, 1915. vii, 398 p., 4 diagrs., 6 tables. illus. 8°. (Chemische Technologie in Einzeldarstellungen.) VEW

Nearly 400 pages done with German thoroughness of text, illustration, and calculation. The bulk of the work is devoted to a detailed account of the theory and practice of steam heating, notably by waste steam. There are chapters on heat losses in buildings, on boilers, conductors, radiators, accessories, insulation, ventilation, drying and drying plants. Well provided with tables of useful data.

Jerie, Gottl. D. Die Verbrennungsmotoren; kurzgefasste Darstellung der Theorie und Ausführung der wichtigsten Verbrennungsmaschinen. Leipzig: M. Schäfer [1915]. viii, 221 p., 7 diagrs. 4°. (Die Schule des Maschinentechnikers. Bd. 15.) VFM

Theory and performance of the most important makes of German gas and oil engines, including the Diesel type, with a discussion of the various fuels. The illustrations are clear and based upon the manufacturers' designs. Of especial note are the double-page colored plates.

Kean, Francis John. The petrol engine; a text-book dealing with the principles of design and construction, with a special chapter on the two-stroke engine. London: E. & F. N. Spon, Ltd., 1915. xiv, 124 p. illus. 8°. VFM

A simply written and clearly illustrated treatise of over one hundred pages by the head of the motor car engineering department of the Polytechnic School of Engineering, London. Emphasizes fundamental principles of design and construction, with chapters on horse-power and the indicator diagram, liquid fuels, engine troubles, and timing of the ignition. Automobile owners should find this very instructive reading.

Kent, William. The mechanical engineers' pocket-book. A reference-book of rules, tables, data, and formulae. Ninth edition thoroughly revised. With the assistance of Robert Thurston Kent... New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. 1 p.l., xliv p., 1 l., 1526 p. diagr., tables. 12°. Desk - Tech. Div.

Ninth edition of this well-known reference book contains in concise form up-to-date information on mechanical and electrical practice. Obsolete material has been rejected; 400 pages have been carefully revised, and 150 pages of new matter added, including data on planing, milling, drilling and grinding, together with an elaborate treatment of the subject of machine-tool driving. The section on electrical engineering has been rewritten and there are many new and important tables. Decidedly useful for engineers and as a library reference.

Manly, Harold Phillips. Oxy-acetylene welding and cutting, electric, forge and thermit welding, together with related methods and materials used in metal working, and the oxygen process for the removal of carbon. Chicago: F. J. Drake & Co. [cop. 1916.] 1 p.l., 5-215 p. illus. 16°. VID

A practical little handbook fairly well illustrated. Twenty-two pages are devoted to descriptions of metals and alloys, with brief references to annealing, hardening, tempering, and case hardening of steel. Over one hundred pages have to do with oxy-acetylene welding and the production and handling of the gases. Chapter six concerns the several methods of electric welding, and chapter seven tells about hand forging and welding. Chapter eight discusses soldering, brazing, and thermit welding, while chapter nine touches briefly on the oxygen process for the removal of carbon from gas-engine cylinders.

Newell, Frederick Haynes, and C. E. Drayer, editors. Engineering as a career; a series of papers by eminent engineers. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1916. xii, 214 p. 12°. VDC

The probabilities of success in the fields of mechanical, railway, hydraulic, metallurgical, electrical, chemical, marine, sanitary, and mining engineering, and of architecture, as well as of engineering in general, are discussed in a practical way by men of note. A book that should help to relieve the perplexities of teachers and parents, as well as of the youths themselves.

and actual, concerning the raw materials, methods of manufacture and distribution, testing for quality, and economic aspects of the ordinary commercial textiles.

Sharp, John M. Practical electric wiring. New York: D. Appleton and Co., 1916. ix, 256 p. illus. 12°. VGM

Decidedly a comprehensive, practical, and completely illustrated little guide to up-to-date installation, by a teacher in the Bliss Electrical School. Thoroughly describes the making of joints and splices; wiring for bells, annunciators, and gas lighting; open, concealed, rigid conduit, motor, and telephone wiring; with numerous questions and useful tables.

Steinmetz, Charles Proteus. Theoretical elements of electrical engineering. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1915. xiii, 368 p. illus. 4. ed. thoroughly rev. and entirely reset. 8°. VGC

The author states that, owing to the rapid expansion and diversification of electrical engineering, it is impossible to include in two volumes all of the material heretofore contained in the Theoretical elements and in Alternating current phenomena. It is proposed, therefore, to issue, later on, a third volume covering "everything beyond the most fundamental principles of general theory and special appliances." The fourth edition of the Theoretical elements is consequently somewhat smaller than the third, although it is so completely revised as to make it practically a new book.

"We have read the book with great interest, and learned much from it, but we regard it more as a book of reference than as a text-book. It will be extremely useful to anyone who has to construct alternating-current machinery, or to lecture or to write books in connection with this class of machinery. The student also well grounded in theory will find much novel and important matter in it. To the beginner, however, who is struggling painfully to get a clear insight into electrical theory, we cannot recommend it."—From a review of the third edition: Electrical review, London, March 25, 1910.

Supino, Giorgio. Land and marine Diesel engines. Translated by...A. G. Bremner...and James Richardson. London: C. Griffin & Co., Ltd., 1915. xv(i), 309 p., 22 diags. illus. 8°. VFM

"Professor Supino, the author, is an Italian engineer of high repute who has made a special study not only of the theory, but of the construction and running of oil engines, and his text-book is widely accepted on the Continent as a standard work... The special value of Professor Supino's work consists in the successful way in which he has attacked the more difficult kinematic and mechanical problems involved. In most cases these have to be solved by practical experience, the results of which are zealously guarded as valuable trade secrets. Those new to the Diesel engine will accordingly find invaluable such problems as those involved in the operation, timing, and reversal of the valves."—Engineering, Jan. 21, 1916, p. 65.

The work is completely illustrated.

POLITICAL SCIENCE

Aldridge, Henry R. The case for town planning; a practical manual for the use of councillors, officers, and others engaged in the preparation of town planning schemes. With an appendix by Frank M.

Elgood... and Edmund R. Abbott... London: National Housing and Town Planning Council [1915]. viii, 679 p. illus. 8°. SER

Part 1 is a history of town-planning in Europe from ancient times. Particular attention is given to the movement in Great Britain during the nineteenth century, ending with the town-planning act of 1909.

Part 2 is concerned only with Great Britain. It describes in detail the preparation of a town-planning scheme, and the desirability of such a scheme from the point of view of the land owner, as well as the cost of land development and cottage building.

The appendix to part 2 includes the annotated text of the Housing and Town Planning Act of 1909, regulations for England, Scotland and Wales and the text of three town planning schemes.

The American college; a series of papers setting forth the program, achievements, present status, and probable future of the American college, with introduction by William H. Crawford... New York: H. Holt & Co., 1915. xi, 194 p. 12°. SSW

"Papers read at a conference on the American college held on the occasion of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Allegheny College."

Applied history; edited by Benjamin F. Shambaugh. v. 2. Iowa City: State Historical Society of Iowa, 1914. xx, 689 p. 8°. SB

Contents: Reorganization of state government in Iowa. Home rule in Iowa. Direct legislation in Iowa. Equal suffrage in Iowa. Selection of public officials in Iowa. Removal of public officials in Iowa. The merit system. Social legislation in Iowa. Child labor legislation in Iowa. Poor relief legislation in Iowa.

Baillet, Henry F. Overhead expense and percentage methods; a lecture on the cost of doing business... New York: D. Williams Co., 1915. 128 p. 12°. TM

A lecture showing what overhead expense is and how it is computed, together with questions and answers illustrating the methods of calculating costs.

Twenty-seven states during the Civil war passed laws and constitutional amendments permitting soldiers in the field to vote. This book is a history of the legislation in each state, and of attempts to pass similar laws in the remaining states.

Bristol, Lucius Moody. Social adaptation. A study in the development of the doctrine of adaptation as a theory of social progress... Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1915. 356 p. 8°. (Harvard economic studies. v. 14.) S

Bibliography, p. 335-342.

A history of the theory of society as an organism, consciously and unconsciously adapting itself to its environment.

"A historical approach to a constructive social philosophy having as its central theme adaptation in its four-fold aspect of passive material and spiritual and active material and spiritual,—this approach beginning with Auguste Comte and Herbert Spencer, though in a few cases including previous writers whose contributions seemed essential to an appreciation of those coming later. The method chosen was to review briefly the social theories of writers in this field who have been most influential in the development of the doctrine of adaptation, and in an order so far as possible, both historical and logical.”—p. 313.

Buerklin, Wilhelm. Süd- und Mittelamerika unter dem Einfluss des Weltkrieges... Göttingen: Otto Hapke Verlag, 1915. vii, 184 p., 21 pl. 8°. TAH

Bibliography, p. 154-182.

The budget, debt, foreign commerce, and particular industries of each country are discussed briefly, and comparisons shown for the past few years. More than half the book is composed of supplements giving a chronological list of important events in each country, bibliography, quotations of South American loans on the London exchange, 1913 to 1915, and a graphic statement of the imports and exports of each country for the last year.

Chandler, William H., and B. O. BERRY. Merchants' parcel post and express guide. Parcel post and express charges from New York, N. Y., Boston, Mass., and Chicago, Ill., and (additional points as shown on pages 3 and 4 taking the same rates) to all express stations in the United States... [Boston: W. H. Chandler,] cop. 1915. 271 p., 22 l. 2. ed. 4°. TVC

Cherington, Paul Terry. The advertising book, 1916. [Garden City:] Doubleday, Page & Co., for the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, 1916. ix, 604 p. 8°. TW

“The chief purpose of the Advertising book—1916—is to put into form for convenient reference some of the available records of recent progress in advertising methods.”

The book is composed largely of quotations from periodical articles, advertisements and business correspondence.

Part 1 deals with advertising of different kinds of stores, i.e., wholesale, retail, department and chain stores.

Part 2 discusses different methods of advertising, trade marks, and advertising standards. The appendix contains the standards of advertising practice adopted by the Associated Advertising Clubs, 1914, for the several departmental branches of advertising.

Clay, Paul. Sound investing... New York: Moody's Magazine and Book Co., 1915. 371 p. 12°. TG

Based on material gathered for Moody's Investors Service and intended to be a guide for the small investor. The reasons for and against investing in the more important classes of securities are given, as well as the best investments for particular classes of persons, as professional men, clerks, etc. The book closes with a few practical suggestions on the selection of a bond house, when to buy and sell, and successful speculation.

Cleveland-Stevens, Edward Carnegie. English railways; their development and their relation to the state. London: G. Routledge and Sons, Ltd., 1915. xvi, 332 p., 2 maps. 8°. (Studies in economics and political science. no. 42.) TPN

“This book aims at presenting a detailed historical account of the consolidation of English railways up to the year 1900. It cannot claim to cover the internal history of the consolidation movement; that can only be done when the story of each of the great English railway companies is written. But it is hoped that it deals fully with an aspect that has a greater general interest and to a far greater degree requires examination—namely, the external relations of the railways, amalgamation as affecting railway communications in general, and as viewed by Parliament and the public, and controlled by Parliament in the interests of the public.”—Introduction.

Corporation security ratings. First annual number, 1916. New York: Moody Manual Co., 1916. 435 p. 8°. TGA

“It is the aim of this volume to present, in at least a tentative way, a division of the securities of most of the corporations treated in Moody's Manual into various classes indicated by letters showing what appear to us to be their relative ratings as investments or speculations.

“We wish to emphasize the point that the ratings in this book are not credit ratings and do not refer in any manner whatever to the commercial credit of any company. The matter of the commercial credit of a corporation is one wholly distinct from that of the investment rating of its securities and one which this volume does not treat.”—Introductory notice.

Cotter, Arundel. The authentic history of the United States Steel Corporation. New York: The Moody Magazine and Book Co., 1916. x, 231 p., 26 pl., 6 ports. 8°. TNK

“It is not the intention of the author of this history of the United States Steel Corporation to compile a work of reference for the steel man. Such a task must properly be left to the trade expert. His object merely is to narrate in as interesting a form as he is able, the principal events leading up to the incorporation of the mighty company, to tell its objects and its policies and the results therefrom on labor, the corporation itself and industry generally.”

De Weese, Truman A. Keeping a dollar at work. Fifty “talks” on newspaper advertising written for the N. Y. Evening Post. [New York:] New York Evening Post, 1915. 176 p. 12°. TW

“The fifty ‘talks’ on newspaper advertising printed in this book were originally written for the New York Evening Post and were afterwards syndicated to a number of newspapers in the larger cities. While their primary purpose is to show the importance of the modern newspaper as a factor in successful merchandising, they cover in a keenly analytical and comprehensive way the whole subject of advertising.”

Donald, W. J. A. The Canadian iron and steel industry. A study in the economic history of a protected industry. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1915. xv, 376 p. 8°. (Hart, Schaffner and Marx prize essays.) TAK

Beginning with a general outline of Canadian economic history this book takes up the history of the iron industry from its origin to 1914. Particular attention is given to the history of the tariff and bounty system under which the industry has developed. Numerous appendices contain statistics of production, imports and exports, prices, maps and a bibliography.

Elder, Benedict. A study in socialism. St. Louis: B. Herder, 1915. xviii p., 4 l., 3-328 p. 12°. SFC

The first of a series of books intended to treat of modern social conditions and their correction. The author, who is opposed to socialism, begins with a consideration of socialist theories because “socialism is today the most conspicuous proposal looking to a betterment of these conditions." He examines socialism as an economic, philosophic, religious, moral, and political principle. The second part of the book covers the history, the third, the aims of socialism. In conclusion socialism is held to be an economic movement based upon principles which the author believes to be unsound.

Gantt, H. L. Industrial leadership. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1916. 128 p. 12°. (Page lectures.) TM

"If democracy is to compete successfully with autocracy in the long run, it must develop organizing and executive methods which will be at least equal to those of autocracy.

"In this course of lectures I have tried to set forth the principles on which I believe an industrial democracy can be based which will be even more effective than any system of industrialism which can be developed under autocracy."

Geddes, Patrick. Cities in evolution; an introduction to the town planning movement and to the study of civics. London: Williams & Norgate, 1915. xv, 409(1) p. illus. 8°. SER

Devoted for the most part to cities in Great Britain. The first half of the book describes the haphazard growth of large cities, no provision ever being made for future conditions, such as increase of traffic, parks, and improved housing. Expensive residence districts have become slums, new slums are being built in the fields as cities expand, and no one takes advantage of present opportunities to make the future city beautiful. In the author's words: "Here, then, in brief and broad summary of economic and industrial history, is some account of the general depression, the mean ugliness of our towns, and of the origins of the tasteless art of the rich and the artless taste of the poor. Slum, semi-slum, super-slum — to this has come the evolution of cities."

The remainder of the volume shows what is now being done for city improvement by means of civic exhibitions, city surveys, education, and organized town planning.

Heft, Louis. Holders of railroad bonds and notes: their rights and remedies, treating particularly of the receivership and of the reorganization of the road, of the foreclosure of the mortgage and of the other proceedings to realize on the security. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1916. xvi, 419 p. 8°. TPG

The average holder of railway securities never takes the trouble to find out what rights he has unless the company fails. This book attempts to give the information "that may help to a better understanding of the nature of railroad securities and of the rights and remedies they confer on their holders."

Hinchman, Walter Swain. The American school; a study of secondary education. Garden City: Doubleday, Page & Co., 1916. xi, 232 p. 12°. (The American books.) STE

The author is English master in Groton School. His book is really a series of essays on important problems of secondary education: qualifications of teachers, relations of parents and teachers, methods, athletics and religious influences. The present curricula receive particular attention, and an outline of a better is suggested.

tics of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, Manchester, 1915... London: Sir Isaac Pitman and Sons [1915], ix, 268 p. 8°. TB

Contents: i. Economics of peace in time of war. ii. The promotion of industrial harmony. iii. Outlets for labor after the war. iv. The effects of the war on credit, currency and finance. v. Economic problems after the war.

Matthai, John. Village government in British India. With a preface by Sidney Webb... London: T. F. Unwin, Ltd. [1915,] xix, 211(1) p. 8°. (Studies in economics and political science. no. 48.) SER

Traditional forms of local government have survived in India and operate simultaneously with the government instituted by the British. This book describes the native administration of local affairs in British India, such as poor relief, education, public works, justice and protection of property. All of these are conducted regularly by agencies generally recognized, though unknown to the law and frequently unsuspected by the authorities.

Miller, Thomas Southworth, the elder. Cotton trade guide and student's manual; a text-book for the American trade and higher institutions of learning, showing operations of the cotton exchanges in connection with spots and futures, historically treated, also, a brief history of the industry and its development, with numerous practical problems. [Flat, Texas, 1915,] 1 p.l., (i)vi-ix p., 1 l., 431 p., 7 pl. illus. 8°. TAK

Modern school houses. Part II. Illustrating and describing recent examples of school house design executed in the United States. New York: American Architect, 1915. 80 p., 3 l., 169 pl. 4°. †STC

Composed largely of photographs of buildings with some drawings of architectural details and equipment.

Munro, William Bennett. Principles and methods of municipal administration. New York: Macmillan Co., 1916. xi, 491 p. 8°. SER

"This volume deals with the actual management of municipal business, especially in the United States. It is intended to supplement the author's book on The government of American cities, which was published three years ago. Accordingly, it has to do with functions rather than with framework; its aim is to show how various city departments are organized, what work they have to do, and what problems they usually encounter in getting things done... It does not attempt to touch upon every phase of city administration, yet the various chapters do include a substantial part of the entire field, and they endeavor to give the reader something more than a mere glimpse of how the problems of a modern city are being handled today." — Preface.

anthracite mines pay small wages, make large profits from their control of a necessary commodity and take advantage of every rise in the price of labor to add a much larger sum to the price paid by the consumer.

Nolen, John, editor. City planning... New York: D. Appleton and Co., 1916. 447 p. 12°. (National Municipal League series.) SER

A series of papers by sixteen experts in city planning, covering wide range of topics, though not intended to be a comprehensive treatise. Bibliographies are given at ends of chapters and a general bibliography on p. 427-436.

Penman, John Simpson. Poverty the challenge to the church. Boston: Pilgrim Press [1915]. xii, 138 p. 12°. SG

Poverty can be abolished without having recourse to socialism through a readjustment of economic conditions. Such a readjustment, requiring sacrifices of personal interest, must have moral force behind it. It is the duty of the church to assume moral leadership and do everything in its power to bring about a proper distribution of wealth.

Schmidt, Ludwig W. Die Entwicklung der Aussenhandelsbeziehungen der Vereinigten Staaten von Amerika während des ersten Kriegsjahres 1914/15. Jena: Verlag von Gustav Fischer, 1915. 24 p., 20 l. 8°. (Kriegswirtschaftliche Untersuchungen aus dem Institut für Seeverkehr und Weltwirtschaft an der Universität Kiel. Heft 3.)

Consists mainly of tables compiled from the Monthly summary and the Foreign commerce and navigation, showing the trade of the United States by countries and by articles during 1913-1915.

There is a brief explanatory note with each table.

Soule, Roy F., editor. Hardware window advertising; a manual for the merchant and window trimmer. Sales making displays from more than 200 leading American hardware stores. New York: D. Williams Co., 1914. 352 p. illus. 4°. TW

Intended for the use of clerks in stores of average size. Two introductory chapters discuss the principles of window advertising. Each succeeding chapter is devoted to the advertisement of a particular variety of hardware, as, cutlery, builder's hardware, sporting goods, etc. Each chapter is profusely illustrated with photographs of actual window displays.

Spargo, John. Marxian socialism and religion; a study of the relation of the Marxian theories to the fundamental principles of religion. New York: B. W. Huebsch, 1915. 2 p.l., vii-xxi, 187 p. 12°. SFC

One of the charges against socialists has been atheism. The controversy over this point Mr. Spargo characterizes as "textual warfare," each side quoting and misquoting the statements of the other.

This book is intended to be a more philosophical consideration of the subject, the author claiming to have shown conclusively "that there is nothing in the Marxian system of thought which requires a denial of belief in God, the Creator and Moral Ruler of the Universe, or of belief in the immortality of the soul."

Taylor, Hugh. Government by natural selection. London: Methuen & Co., Ltd. [1915.] x p., 1 l., 211(1) p. 12°. SEF

History has always been regarded as a narration of facts. The aim of the historian, according to the author of this book, should be to discover the principle underlying human progress, and this principle when discovered will be found to be connected with the Darwinian law.

Only that part of history which is concerned with government is considered in this book. In civilized society the desire for political distinction causes the struggle which brings to power the men best fitted to rule. These few are the men who should legislate, and electoral systems, parliaments and democracy in general are good in so far as they attain this end.

"The end of government, conditioned as a nation is by the laws of international rivalry... is the greatest sum of national energy of which the people is capable.

"Only a nation whose political system habitually encourages government by the ablest can ensure the leadership, the organization, and the wise treatment of internal and external difficulties necessary to maintain a proud position through centuries."

Wrightington, Sydney Russell. The law of unincorporated associations and similar relations. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1916. xxvi, 486 p. 8°. TNG

In order to escape the governmental regulation now so prevalent in the United States many associations are doing business without incorporation. This book reviews the law applicable to such associations and is intended for the use of lawyers.

Zueblin, Charles. American municipal progress. New York: The Macmillan Co., 1916. xiv p., 1 l., 522 p., 31 pl. new & rev. ed. 8°. (Social science textbooks.) SER

Bibliography, prepared by Helen Bernice Sweeney, p. 429-495.

Intended to be a complete description of the recent achievements of American cities. Particular emphasis is laid on social activities, charities, education, recreation, parks and libraries. The last two chapters are on municipal administration and efficiency.

With so much ground to cover the discussion of each topic is necessarily brief.

National Terra Cotta Society. Architectural terra cotta; brochure series... v. 1. New York: National Terra Cotta Society, 1914. illus. f°. †MRW

Sparrow, Walter Shaw. A book of bridges, by Frank Brangwyn... and Walter Shaw Sparrow. London: J. Lane, 1915. xiv p., 2 l., 3-415 p., 36 col'd pl. illus. 4°. MRA

"Paintings and etchings of bridges... have for years held an important place in Mr. Brangwyn's art, and in this book there have been gathered together many of his most interesting paintings and studies of this sort. Mr. Sparrow's text offers a critical appreciation of the illustrations from the artistic viewpoint, together with much interesting comment upon the subjects, their engineering, historical and social features."—N. Y. Times, Oct. 20, 1915.

Wallis, Frank Edwin. A-B-C of architecture. New York: Harper & Bros. [1915.] 4 p.l., 107(1) p. illus. 16°. (Harper's A-B-C series.) MRQD

"A handbook for beginners... not only instructive in an elementary way, but incites the reader to go deeper into the subject. The author takes up in succession the great styles of architecture... and shows briefly how one form grew out of another, and how... distinctive features were created which gave rise to the names applied to the various styles."—Evening Post (N. Y.), Nov. 13, 1915.

Ward, Clarence. Mediaeval church vaulting. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1915. 192 p. 8°. (Princeton University. Princeton monographs in art and archaeology. v. 5.) MRB

A scholarly treatise on a subject of obvious interest.

Witting, Felix. Kirchenbauten der Auvergne. Mit 9 Abbildungen im Text. Strassburg: J. H. E. Heitz, 1904. 59 p. illus. 4°. (Zur Kunstgeschichte des Auslandes. Heft 28.) MRBB

Worringer, Wilhelm. Formprobleme der Gotik. Muenchen: R. Piper & Co., 1912. 6 p.l., 127 p., 25 pl. 3. ed. 8°. MQS

A "style-psychological" investigation. The so-called objective historical method, says the author, simply amounts to the measuring of past deeds by present-day presumptions. The field of hypothesis, of speculation, must therefore be entered, in which "we come nearer to absolute objectivity than does short-sighted realism... The history of religiosity and art suffer most from the inadequacy of our power of historical perception... With each fact, we must reckon with the presence of psychical presumptions which are not our own."

England

Cox, John Charles. Pulpits, lecterns, & organs in English churches. London: Oxford University Press, 1915. 2 p.l., vii-xi, 228 p. illus. 8°. MRBV

"A brief but well-compacted survey intended primarily for the 'general reader'...done so well that the professional architect may also find it a useful addition to his library."—Nation, Feb. 10, 1916.

The Library has a number of books on the subject, showing buildings as well as details.

Ferree, Barr. American estates and gardens. New York: Munn and Co., 1906. 3 p.l., ix-xvi, 306 p., 8 pl. illus. f°. †MQWO

Garnett, Porter. Stately homes of California. With an introduction by Bruce Porter. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1915. xx, 95 p., 21 pl. 4°. MRGF

"The American reader...can hardly fail to find...much to engage his attention. The architecture...is of that melting-pot kind which takes its constituent parts from as many sources as make up our population... Mr. Garnett's descriptions...include some mention of artistic treasures."—N. Y. Times, Dec. 19, 1915.

Howe, Samuel. American country houses of to-day; an illustrated account of some excellent houses built and gardens planted during the last few years showing unmistakable influence of the modern trend in ideals architectural. New York: Architectural Book Pub. Co., 1915. xix, 424 p. illus. 4°. MRGF

Title indicates scope of book. Individual instances used to emphasize general principles. The chapters group the stucco, brick, half-timber, and stone, the "setting of the house," "water as a decorative agent," and "garden cities." Useful and interesting both to architects and to prospective house-owners.

James, Juliet Helena Lombard. Palaces and courts of the exposition; a handbook of the architecture, sculpture and mural paintings with special reference to the symbolism. San Francisco: California Book Co., 1915. xi, 151 p., 1 pl., 1 plan. illus. 16°. MQWO

"A series of studies relating to the principal masters and monuments which caused the republic to be, in the last two centuries of its reign, among the first and most illustrious centres of the renaissance."

Much space is given to the Pisano family and there are numerous illustrations.

Stained Glass

Haas, Wilhelm. Moderne Vorlagen für Blei- und Messing-Verglasungen, entworfen von Wilhelm Haas... 131 meist farbige Entwürfe auf 32 Tafeln. Berlin: M. Spielmeier [1903]. 1 l., 32 col'd pl. 2. ed. f°. † MRY Stained glass for secular use.

DECORATIVE AND APPLIED ART

Furniture and Interior Decoration

Herts, Benjamin Russell. The decoration and furnishing of apartments; the artistic treatment of apartments ranging from the small two-room suite to the elaborate duplex and triplex. Illustrated by 40 color prints and photographs of the author's work. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1915. xv, 190 p., 39 pl. 4°. MLO

Each pl. with page of explanatory text.

"Interesting as showing the fashionable American taste in decoration and furniture. It is largely influenced by the different conditions of urban life on the other side of the Atlantic... American ideals, superficially at all events, run in the direction of elegance rather than comfort. Mr. Herts is an advocate of either frankly modern work or modern reproductions and adaptations from the antique... On the appropriate use of colour Mr. Herts sets great store... Mr. Herts gives much sound and sensible advice." — Connoisseur, Nov., 1915.

Parsons, Frank Alvah. Interior decoration; its principles and practice. Garden City, N. Y.: Doubleday, Page & Co., 1915. xiv, 284 p., 1 l., 57 pl. 8°. MLO

"Treats this subject from the standpoint of the householder rather than that of the professional, and gives not only good advice, but the principles underlying good taste, in a spirited and convincing manner.

"Presents and elucidates the elements of color, form, balance, emphasis, unity, and so on, in decoration, and gives specific suggestions for such details as hanging pictures, lighting, and choosing decorative objects... Mr. Parsons is not content with externals, but is desirous that his reader shall lay hold of the essence of the matter... the principles of art." — Evening Post, New York.

Schulz, Otto. "Nya möbler." [Bd. 1-2. Göteborg: Eget förlag [1913-15]. illus. 8°. MOF

Swedish furniture.

Upmark, Gustaf Herman Fabian. Möbler i afdelningen för de högre stånden... Med text af Gustaf Upmark. Utgifna genom Nordiska Museet. Stockholm: P. A. Norstedt & Söner [1912]. 110 p., 2 l., 100 pl. 4°. MOF

Swedish furniture.

Wallick, Ekin. Inexpensive furnishings in good taste. New York: Hearst's International Library Co., 1915. 128 p., 7 pl. illus. 8°. MLO

"The author has taken the trouble to go about town and select what is really worth while from the standpoint of design and practicability. Then he has printed in plain type the prices of the pieces, with descriptions and illustrations... Different styles are contrasted, the appropriate setting for each given, yet keeping in mind the limitations of the average New York home." — Evening Post, Sept. 13, 1915.

Wright, Richardson Little, editor. Inside the house of good taste. New York: McBride, Nast & Co., 1915. 2 p.l., iii-v p., 2 l., 155 p. illus. 4°. MLO

"The personality of a room should be the personality of the person who dwells in it." — Foreword.

Numerous illustrations of rooms, from photographs, showing various arrangements.

INTRODUCTION

AT the end of his eulogy "on the auspicious birth, sublime virtues, and triumphant death of General George Washington" the Rev. Samuel Tomb wrote this quaint acrostic:

Glorious as the Orb of day,
Expelling darkness with his ray;
On all the nations shedding joy;
Resound his virtues,— spread his fame,
Grateful, record th' illustrious Name;
Ev'ry tongue his praise employ.

What nation round this spacious earth
Adorn'd by such an Hero's birth?
Shall we not then his death bemoan?
Hail him! ye angels, on his way.
Illumine his path, AUTHOR of day.
Note him, ye Seraphs, round the throne.
Go down, my soul,— lament thy loss,
Thy mournful country sits in tears,
On ev'ry heart his Name emboss;
Nor let it be effac'd by years.

That the wish expressed in the last lines of the acrostic must have been fulfilled far beyond the expectations of the Rev. Samuel Tomb seems probable from the fact that of the four hundred and forty titles of addresses and tributes written in honor of Washington and brought together in the present list, over three hundred and forty represent separate eulogies — and by separate eulogies is meant only those written by different authors or delivered upon different occasions by a given author.

This is the more interesting in that all were written or delivered during the three months between Washington's death, December 14, 1799, and February 22, 1800, the date set apart as the national day of mourning; and that during these months of mourning, memorial services are known to have been held in nearly two hundred towns from the Maine coast to Savannah, and as far west as Lexington, Kentucky. The tone of all the addresses and eulogies is one of sincere, personal loss. This is accentuated by the fact that the memorial services were frequently conducted under the auspices of Washington's old companions in arms — the Society of the Cincinnati — or by his brethren of the Masonic order, and the oration of the day subsequently published by the society. On over twenty-five per cent., the statement appears that the oration was delivered at the request of the townspeople and published by vote of the town or at the expense of some local organization. It is not unusual to find in the proceedings of the town, that a copy of the "ingenious" or "pathetic" discourse should be given free to each family of the community. In many cases the most popular orations ran into several editions within a few months, and were later reprinted, and even translated, abroad. The local newspapers devoted their best space to printing and quoting the eulogies, both prose and verse, and seem almost to have vied with one another in their desire to pass on the news of the memorial services, from one community to another.

Of the three hundred and forty-six separate eulogies known to have been delivered or written during this time, the texts of only thirty-eight are not known to be extant. Eleven others are in manuscript or late reprint form, and ten are known only through quotations and extracts from the press. Since the publication of Hough's list of Washingtoniana in 1865, nearly a hundred new eulogies have been put on record, not to mention as many more editions or variant issues of the titles Hough had listed.

In the present record, no attempt is made to cover the field of contemporary newspapers, as the material thus afforded would form a monograph in itself. The study of the subject from this point of view would undoubtedly produce evidence regarding many orations whose texts are now lost, and it would furnish much material of interest regarding the proceedings and memorial services held in the various towns, throughout the States.

It was the aim, in compiling the following list, to bring together the titles of such eulogies as are known at the present time, and to publish them for the use of students of Washingtoniana, especially for those who may wish to avail themselves of the collection belonging to this Library. For this reason, the checklist has been divided into two parts. The first comprises the catalogue of Washington eulogies in this Library, with such notes as seemed necessary to differentiate the editions or variant issues, or to bring out whatever may be of special interest. The second part is a short-title list of eulogies not in the collection of this Library but checked for the libraries where copies may be found. Following this is a Calendar of the dates of the memorial services, illustrating the diffusion of the news of the nation's bereavement as it spread from town to town and the general state of mourning throughout the country; also, a Census of the towns in which services are known to have been held.

The following checklist probably comprises the fullest record of Washington eulogies and funeral orations which has been made up to the present time, since it is based upon a comparative study of earlier bibliographies and catalogues of Washingtoniana and embraces, as well, the researches since made by the various bibliographers and librarians most interested in this subject. In order to make the list as comprehensive as possible for the eulogies within its scope, after the available sources here had been searched and the list compiled, several extra sets of proofs were struck off for checking in other libraries. In this way the location of issues not in this Library has become known and nearly a dozen new titles have been added to the original compilation. This was made possible through the courtesy of Mr. Charles K. Bolton of the Boston Athenaeum, Mr. Clarence S. Brigham of the American Antiquarian Society, Mr. Champlin Burrage of the John Carter Brown Library, Mr. Worthington C. Ford of the Massachusetts Historical Society, Miss Josephine S. Heydrick of the Pequot Library, Mr. Robert H. Kelby of the New York Historical Society, Mr. Herbert Putnam, the Librarian of Congress, Mr. Bunford Samuel of the Library Company of Philadelphia, Mr. Ernest Spofford of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and Mr. George Parker Winship of the Widener Memorial Library.

Especial thanks are due Mr. Charles Evans of Chicago, and Mr. Walter Updike Lewisson of Boston, a student and collector of Washingtoniana. Mr. Evans has generously given much information from the manuscript of an unpublished volume of his "American Bibliography," and Mr. Lewisson has furnished titles and notes from his own remarkable collection.

This includes — in addition to the eulogies in the collection of the late James Lenox, the Astor Library and the Tilden Library — those which have come to the Library in the Duyckinck, the R. L. Stuart, the Bancroft, the Emmet, the Myers, the Martha Washington, and the Ford collections; as well as those more recently added from other sources. Since the type for the list was set up, four desiderata and the photostat facsimile of a fifth have been added to the collection, and their titles inserted in their respective places in the list, without numbers.

Two eulogies delivered in Holland directly after the period covered by the list, and several quotations from contemporary newspapers or periodicals have also been inserted, unnumbered. In some cases it has seemed desirable to include late reprints of the eulogies. No attempt has been made, however, either in this section or in the Second Part of the list, to make an exhaustive record other than of the eulogies delivered or printed within the three months of national mourning, December 1799 — February 1800.

Frontispiece, the portrait of Washington by Joseph Wright engraved by H. Roosing. Hart 170.

Contents: Voorberigt [containing an account of the proceedings at Charlestown, Dec. 31, 1799]. Moses en Washington vergeleeken [translated from Jedidiah Morse's Prayer and sermon, delivered at Charlestown, December 31, 1799, on the death of George Washington]. Aanspraak van den Generaal Washington. Leevensschets van den Generaal George Washington [translated from the Biographical sketch of Gen. George Washington published in the official Proceedings of the town of Charlestown, Charlestown, 1800]. Bijlaagen. Washington [a poem].

The translation is by Petrus Loosjes Adriaanszoon.

Appended at the end is a leaf which appears to be a half-title, with the word "Redenvoeringen" on the recto, and on the verso, a one-line quotation from Virgil. This may possibly be explained by the last paragraph of the Voorberigt, which reads: "...en wanneer ons nog eenige nadere bijzonderheden ter waardige Gedachtenis van den Grooten Washington in handen komen, zullen wij deeze Bijdraagen agtervolgen. This leaf does not appear in the copy preserved in the archives at Haarlem.

Newspapers

The few newspapers quoted in the present list, because of some especial interest, may serve to illustrate the fact that in practically all of the contemporary papers one may expect to find frequent tributes to Washington from the time of his death, December 14, 1799, through February, 1800, with occasional references for some weeks thereafter.

Because of the general state of mourning throughout the country, the memorial services in honor of Washington were the most vital interest of the day—as is made evident by the fact that, during the three months of mourning, the local newspapers vied with one another in the printing, reprinting and quoting of eulogies. Frequently the turned column-rule was used to give the effect of mourning borders, as in the much-facsimiled Ulster County Gazette of Jan. 4, 1800.

A list of the newspapers covering this period, which are in this Library, may be found in the chronological index of our

A CALENDAR OF SERVICES IN MEMORY OF WASHINGTON
ILLUSTRATING THE GENERAL STATE OF MOURNING
THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY FROM HIS DEATH,
DECEMBER 14, 1799, THROUGH FEBRUARY 22, 1800

In the cases where one oration only is known to have been delivered in a given town, the name of the orator will be found under the town, in the Census following this Calendar.

(In the few instances where it has not been possible to determine the exact date of delivery, the eulogies are not listed in the Calendar.)

ROMANI AND DARD<sup>1</sup>

BY GEORGE F. BLACK, PH.D.

ON looking over Leitner's Vocabulaire comparatif des langues parlées entre Kaboul et Kachmîr<sup>2</sup> I was struck with the close resemblance many of the words in his lists bore to Romani. More careful study of his vocabularies, which include ten languages, has enabled me to compile the following comparative list.

The Romani words are all from Paspati.<sup>3</sup> (As.) distinguishes Asiatic-Romani words given by him. Where the Dard word has the same meaning as the Romani no translation of it is given.

The Dard languages listed by Leitner are the following:

Ar. = Arnyíá. Spoken in Chitral. The language is also known as Chitráli.

As. = Astori. A dialect of Shiná. Astor is on the left bank of the Indus.

Deh. = Dehgani.

Gh. = Ghilgíti or Gilgiti. A dialect of Shiná, on the right bank of the Indus along the lower course of the Gilgit river. Both gs are pronounced hard like g in give.

Ghal. = Ghalchah.

K. = Kachmiri.

Kaf. = Kafiri. The language of the Siah-Posh tribes of Kafirstan.

Kal. = Kalásha-Mánder. The language of the Bashgeli Kafirs.

Kand. = Kandia or Kilia.

Kh. = Khajuná. Spoken by the people of Henza and Nager.

Shina or Šinā is the language spoken by the people of Astor, Gilgit, Chilas, etc. The Dards are an Aryan people, speaking a Sanskritic tongue.

(2) angár "coal" - - - - yangar, K. àngár, Kand.; angâr, Ar., Deh., angár, angá, K. "fire."

<sup>1</sup> This is the third article on Romani to appear in the Bulletin. The others were An American-Romani Vocabulary, by Albert Thomas Sinclair, compiled and edited by George F. Black, published in the Bulletin October, 1915, vol. 19, p. 727-738; and Avesta and Romani, also by Sinclair, and also edited by Dr. Black, in the Bulletin December, 1915, vol. 19, p. 955-957.

GIFTS

DURING the month of April the Library received as gifts a total of 3,930 volumes, 7,520 pamphlets, 14 prints, and 53 maps. The following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of these gifts: From Miss Henrietta C. Bartlett of New York the Library received a copy of "A census of Shakespeare's plays in quarto 1594-1709" by Henrietta C. Bartlett and Alfred W. Pollard, New Haven, 1916; from Mr. J. P. Morgan, four volumes of catalogues of the "Collection of J. Pierpont Morgan; drawings by the Old Masters formed by C. Fairfax Murray," privately printed, London; and from Hon. Morgan J. O'Brien, a copy (No. 523 of 650 copies printed) of the "History of the Manhattan Club, Fiftieth Anniversary 1865-1915, a narrative of the activities of half a century," by Henry Watterson, New York, 1915.

From Gen. Rush C. Hawkins of New York came four American wood-engravings; from Mr. Sears Gallagher of Boston, an etching and two pencil sketches by himself; and from Mrs. L. M. Ruben of New York, a collection of 498 photographs of opera singers, many of them autographed.

From Mr. Elmer Adler of Rochester, N. Y., the Library received a copy of the privately printed "Catalogue of an exhibition of portraiture of James McNeill Whistler; the Memorial Art Gallery, Rochester, New York, 1915"; from Mrs. E. M. Blake of Brooklyn, a collection of 180 novels, text-books, music scores, magazines, etc., and an oak cabinet; from Dr. S. Ellsberg of New York, 18 volumes, consisting of six sets of Dr. Charles Zhitlowsky's "Gesammelte Schriften" (in Yiddish), Jubilee edition, New York, 1912; from Lieut. Loren C. Grieves, Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y., two copies of "Military sketching and map reading for Non-Commissioned Officers," by First Lieutenant Loren C. Grieves, 30th Infantry, Washington, 1915; from the Holland Society of New York, a bronze medallion commemorative of the 300th Anniversary of the founding of the Dutch Settlement on Manhattan in 1613, and the 250th Anniversary of the Founding of the Board of Aldermen.

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Austin, Frank Eugene. How to make low-pressure transformers... Hanover, N. H.: F. E. Austin, 1915. 17 p. illus. 2. ed. with additions. 12°. VG

Practical constructive directions, with operative costs, for a "step down" transformer designed "to reduce the pressure from 110 volts, to about 8 volts as a minimum, for experimental purposes, such as operating low pressure tungsten lamps, ringing bells, operating small direct-current series motors used with fans or small electric cars, operating sparking devices for gasoline-engines, operating small arc-lights, and for a variety of other uses."

Reviewed in Power, Dec. 7, 1915; in Mining and scientific press, Nov. 20, 1915.

Burton, Myron Garfield. Shop projects based on community problems. Muncie, Ind.: Vocational Supply Co. [1915.] 382 p. illus. 8°. VEN

This excellent work is broadly educational in that the child is taught to make things which tend to instill into his nature proper personal care and respect for neat and orderly arrangement in his home life, and consequently in his community. For each article to be made there is a half-tone reproduction, a statement of its uses and significance, the materials required, a working drawing, a detailed specification, and a list of references that relate the article to the life of the community. The supplement tells how to make mechanical and shop drawings, use tools, finish wood, and make the principal joints used in carpentry.

Cary, Edward Richard. Geodetic surveying. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. ix, 279 p. illus. tables. 8°. VDE

This text-book, by the professor of railroad engineering and geodesy in Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, is based mainly upon the methods used by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. The appendices are devoted to time, longitude, latitude and azimuth, and the method of least squares. Has two pages of bibliography.

Christopher, J. E. Coal distillation, gasification, and by-products... Wigan, Eng.: T. Wall and Sons, Ltd., 1915. 90 p. diagrs. 8°. VHW

"The subject matter is largely a reprint of a series of articles written for mining students, and covers in a general way the processes of carbonizing coal, both at gasworks and coke ovens, and the methods adopted for the recovery of by-products. As the author points out in his preface, it must be regarded as a preparation for more detailed study... Various types of ovens and by-product plants are described in some detail, and the theoretical side of by-product coking is explained in an elementary way. The manufacture of producer gas, tar distillation and benzol recovery are also briefly dealt with. The book is one which we can readily recommend for the use of foremen, workmen, and others who wish to get a general idea of the working of all sections of a by-product coking plant."—The Gas world, London, Dec. 4, 1915.

McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. viii, 272 p. illus. tables. 1. ed. 8°. VGM

Practical, with carefully prepared line drawings and tabular data, this book omits the purely electrical problems of voltage and wire size, and considers the mechanical details of wooden, steel, and concrete supports; towers, foundations, protective coatings, erection and costs, and protection, with general specifications.

Dunn, F. B. Industrial uses of fuel oil. San Francisco: Technical Pub. Co., 1916. 4 p.l., 235 p., 1 plan. illus. tables. 8°. VHV

Concise and thoroughly practical, this work should be of service to engineers, architects, efficiency engineers, or others interested in the subject. Besides the chapters on the applicability of fuel oil to the glass, rubber, sugar, steel, and other industries, there is one devoted to domestic uses. The chapter on furnace efficiency describing how boiler losses may be checked and efficiency determined is noteworthy. Fully illustrated with many line drawings.

Reviewed in the National engineer, March, 1916, p. 127; in Iron age, Feb. 17, 1916, p. 436; in Mining & scientific press, Feb. 12, 1916, p. 258; in Concrete, March, 1916, p. 140.

Folwell, Amory Prescott. Sewerage; the designing, construction, and maintenance of sewerage systems. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. x, 540 p. illus. tables. 7. ed., rev. and enlarged. 8°. VDI

This well-known work on the design, construction, and maintenance of sewers, and on sewage disposal is now in its seventh edition, exceeding the sixth edition (1912) by 36 pages. The changes relate to recent developments in sewage treatment, especially as regards tank treatment, including such information as is available concerning the new process of activated sludge. The methods for the clarification of sewage have, in general, been dealt with at greater length than those for more refined purification. There are standard specifications recommended by the American Society of Municipal Improvements, a table of more than 900 sewage treatment plants in the United States, and instructions for testing sewage and sewage effluents.

Hamilton, Douglas Thomas. Cartridge manufacture; a treatise covering the manufacture of rifle cartridge cases, bullets, powders, primers and cartridge clips, and the designing and making of tools used in connection with the production of cartridge cases and bullets, together with a description of the principal operations in the manufacture of combination paper and brass shot shells. New York: Industrial Press, 1916. 4 p.l., 167 p. illus. 8°. VWS

Not only of interest to cartridge makers, but to those who desire to know of approved methods for the drawing of deep metal shells for any purpose. Gives principal dimensions, weights and other details of the cartridges used by the various nations. Well illustrated.

Howe, Charles Burton. Mechanical drafting. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. 1 p.l., v-x, 147 p. illus. ob. 8°. (Wiley technical series.) VFE

"Although the subject is undoubtedly overwritten, the book under review immediately justifies itself in a manner with which, unfortunately, only a few of its predecessors can be accredited... The noteworthy features are, first, thoroughness, and second, the practical exclusion of all non-essentials to the subject of mechanical drawing. The book forms an excellent manual for teachers, in that it supplies all the conventions and problem sheets likely to be found necessary in any course. The treatment of orthographic projection is splendidly conceived and thoroughly worked out."—American machinist, March 9, 1916, v. 44, p. 438.

Also reviewed in Mining and scientific press, March 11, 1916, v. 112, p. 392.

Kidder, Frank Eugene. The architects' and builders' pocket-book; a handbook for architects, structural engineers, builders and draughtsmen, by the late Frank E. Kidder... compiled by a staff of specialists, Thomas Nolan, editor-in-chief... New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. xxiii p., 1 l., 3-1816 p. 16. ed., rewritten. illus. tables. 12°. Desk-Tech. Div.

Practically a new book—the well-known "Kidder" revised by a staff of experts headed by the professor of architectural construction in the University of Pennsylvania. There are many new illustrations and much up-to-date matter upon the subjects of reinforced-concrete mill and factory construction; also extended tables of specific gravities and weights of substances, architectural acoustics, waterproofing of foundations, the quantity system of estimating, architectural societies of the world, and extended lists of architectural schools.

Reviewed in Building age, Jan., 1916.

Kiesling, Richard. Chemische Technologie des Erdöls... Braunschweig: F. Vieweg & Sohn, 1915. 805 p. 4°. (Neues Handbuch der chemischen Technologie. [V.] 9.) VHY

A comprehensive work of over 800 pages and nearly 500 illustrations covering the geology, geographical distribution, and statistics of petroleum, its production and chemistry, including the related products of natural gas, paraffin, and asphalt. Manufacturing and refining processes are carefully described and there are many references to important patents and to books and periodicals. Includes a section of physical and chemical testing.

Michenfelder, Carl. Die Materialbewegung in chemisch-technischen Betrieben. Leipzig: O. Spamer, 1915. viii, 169 p., 33 pl. illus. 8°. (Chemische Technologie in Einzeldarstellungen.) VFG

Up-to-date information on the handling of materials both in bulk and in piece in large chemical works. Describes horizontal and perpendicular systems, including belt, spiral, and air conveyors, scoops, and truck tilts. There are several classified lists of German patents, reading references, and nearly 300 illustrations including 32 double-page drawings.

Moss, James Alfred. Manual of military training. Intended, primarily, for use in connection with the instruction and training of cadets in our military schools, and, of company officers of the organized militia, and, secondarily, as a guide to company officers of the regular army, the aim being to make efficient fighting companies and to qualify our cadets and militia officers for the duty and responsibilities of company officers of volunteers. Menasha, Wis.: G. Banta Pub. Co. [cop. 1914.] 700 p., 2 maps, 1 plan. illus. 12°. VWF

By a United States army officer. A detailed exposition of the organization, maintenance and duties of the military company—condensed into a well-ordered and completely indexed little volume. In addition to the drill regulations and field operations, there are chapters on first aid, physical trainings, map reading and military sketching, loading wagons, camping, and individual cooking. The U. S. drill regulations are especially well treated in text and illustration.

Moss, James Alfred, and M. B. STEWART. Self-helps for the citizen-soldier, being a popular explanation of things military. Pen sketches by Lieut. W. E. Larned. Menasha, Wis.: G. Banta Pub. Co. [1915.] 6 p.l., 239 p., 1 port. illus. 8°. VWC

"Dedicated to every red-blooded American who is willing to do a man's share in the defence of his country." Tells in a general way about the nature of war, our defences, what it means to recruit a million volunteers, briefly outlining the training course and the personal qualities that make for efficiency. Has chapters on the militia, college students' and business men's camps, how a battle is fought, rifle clubs, and practical hints for self-preparation.

Muhlert, F. Die Industrie der Ammoniak- und Cyanverbindungen. Leipzig: O. Spamer, 1915. viii, 278 p. illus. tables. 8°. (Chemische Technologie in Einzeldarstellungen.) VOF

A comprehensive well-illustrated review of these increasingly important industries, including synthesis of cyanogen compounds by means of atmospheric nitrogen. Has historical and statistical data, as well as a chronological list of German patents.

Norcock, Lawrence, and F. W. WILSON. Map reading, a self-instructional manual. London: Sifton, Praed & Co., 1915. 109 p. illus. sq. 8°. Map Room

A timely manual by British army officers designed to furnish a working knowledge of military map reading and topography. Has examination papers and map problems, with answers.

Pagé, Victor Wilfred. Starting, lighting and ignition systems; elementary principles, practical application wiring diagrams and repair hints. A complete exposition explaining all forms of electrical ignition systems used with internal combustion engines of all types, also includes a comprehensive series of instructions pertaining to starting and lighting systems of automobiles... New York: N. W. Henley Pub. Co., 1916. 1 p.l., 5-502 p., 1 diagr. illus. tables. 12°. TON

A practical, simply written, and up-to-date treatise with nearly 300 illustrations. The fundamental principles of electricity and magnetism are carefully explained. Chapter 7 describes non-glare devices, electrical alarms and signals, electrical gear-shifters and brakes, carburetor warmers, electric vulcanizers, Entz electric transmission, and novel lamps and other accessories.

Ramsey, Albert R. J., and H. C. WESTON. A manual on explosives. London: G. Rout-

ledge and Sons, Ltd., 1916. xi, 116 p., 1 pl. illus. 12°. VOG

Written to give "the munitions worker or the interested general reader, at a low cost, a concise and intelligent understanding of the nature and manufacture of explosives." Contains a short history of the development of explosives; their application in naval and military science and in engineering; a short chapter on industrial poisoning among explosives workers; as well as a more detailed treatment of the explosives themselves. A short bibliography, an adequate index, and twenty-eight diagrams complete this readable and non-technical little book.

Rose, Sir T. K. The metallurgy of gold. London: C. Griffin & Co., Ltd., 1915. 601 p. 8°. (Griffin's scientific text-books.) VIN

This well-known work, now in its 6th edition, represents considerable rewriting, expansion, and rearrangement to correspond with the rapid advance of metallurgical science during the past ten years. Its 600 pages treat of the properties and chemistry of gold, the working of placers, ore-dressing, stamp-milling, cyanide process, refining and assaying. Has over 200 illustrations, abundant footnote references, and a classified bibliography of 11 pages.

Reviewed in Mining and scientific press, Jan. 15, 1916; in Iron and coal trade review, Dec. 17, 1915; in Mining magazine, Dec., 1915; in Mining journal, March 4, 1916.

Sauveur, Albert. The metallography and heat treatment of iron and steel. Cambridge, Mass.: Sauveur and Boylston, 1916. xvi, 486 p. illus. 2. ed. 4°. VIP

"This is a revised second edition of Professor Sauveur's well-known book on metallography of iron and steel. It is clearly printed, very practical, beautifully illustrated. . . . The new edition has had almost every chapter revised, over fifty pages of new matter and 100 illustrations added, and the book entirely reset. We commend the postponement of the phase rule and equilibrium diagram to the closing chapters, when the student has acquired familiarity with the metallographic facts which these principles co-ordinate. It is a well-written and extremely useful book, and the new edition is superior to the former." — Metallurgical & chemical engineering, April 1, 1916.

Verrill, Alpheus Hyatt. The book of the motor boat; how to operate and care for motor boats and motors. New York: D. Appleton and Co., 1916. 5 p.l., 200 p., 1 pl. illus. 8°. VXHN

Practical. Has a well-arranged chapter on motor troubles and their remedies.

— The book of the sailboat; how to rig, sail and handle small boats. New York: D. Appleton and Co., 1916. 4 p.l., 192 p., 1 pl. illus. 8°. VXH

Tells what kind of a craft is best suited to a particular purpose, all about its parts and the various rigs, something about knots and splices, with a chapter on construction. Has directions for sailing and for up-keep. There is also a useful glossary of nautical terms.

Volkman, Karl Th. Chemische Technologie des Leuchtgases. Leipzig: O. Spamer, 1915. viii, 220 p., 1 diagr. illus. tables. 8°. (Chemische Technologie in Einzeldarstellungen.) VOL

Although this is a practical work designed for the gas engineer, it contains much of interest to the layman who desires to know something of the history and manufacture of illuminating gas, gas purification and the recovery of by-products. Well illustrated, attractively printed and well supplied with footnote references.

Wagner, Frederick Henry. Coal and coke. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. xii, 431 p., 6 diagrs., 1 pl. illus. tables. 8°. VHW

The author states that approximately 75 per cent. of the American gas supply is carburetted water-gas and that the successful revival of the coal-gas industry here will necessarily have to follow English practice. Part one deals with coal, its origin and classification, oxidation and spontaneous combustion, gas and coke coals, analysis, preparation and storage. Part two covers carbonization in ovens and retort benches, combustion, flue-gases, pyrometry, thermal reactions, low temperature carbonization, power from waste heat, concluding with a discussion of the characteristics of coke. Provided with good illustrations, several of which are double-page plates.

Reviewed in Metallurgical and chemical engineering, April 15, 1916, p. 460.

Woodroffe, Joseph Froude. The rubber industry of the Amazon, and how its supremacy can be maintained; based on the experience of Joseph F. Woodroffe. . . . edited and with additions by Harold Hamel Smith. . . . with a foreword on the Latin-American Indian, by Viscount Bryce. . . . [London: J. Bale, Sons & Danielsson, Ltd., 1915. xlviii, 435 p., 25 pl., 1 port. illus. 8°. VMV

Over 400 pages devoted largely to the labor aspect of the problem, with considerable information relative to the technology of rubber preparation. Suggests that the industry be made subsidiary to agriculture, stock-raising, and other industries; that Chinese, Japanese, and other labor be introduced to clear and settle the lands; that the flat open lands be ditched, drained and cultivated, and that the forest areas be cleared and drained. Mr. Smith, the editor, discusses the interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine as affecting the industry. The work is well illustrated and is provided with a bibliography and an exceptionally complete index.

Worden, Edward Chauncey. Technology of cellulose esters; a theoretical and practical treatise on the origin, history, chemistry, manufacture, technical application, and analysis of the products of acylation and alkylation of normal and modified cellulose, including: nitrocellulose, celluloid, pyroxylin, collodion, celluloidin, gun-cotton, acetylcellulose and viscose, as applied to technology, pharmacy, microscopy, medicine, photography, and the warlike and peaceful arts. In ten volumes. v. 8. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1916. illus. 8°. VOD

This painstaking practical work (volume 8 of a proposed monumental series of ten volumes) aims to "cover the entire field of the water-insoluble carbohydrate carboxylates—specifically the cellulose acetates and formates—whose claim to industrial recognition is characterized by their low burning capacity, in distinction to the corresponding nitric esters which are both inflammable, combustible and explosive, and in contradistinction to the pyroxylin plastics typified by celluloid, which exhibit a well marked thermoplasticity at temperatures below that of boiling water."

Has remarkably complete footnote citations and excellent indexes (notably that of subjects, comprising nearly 100 pages). Patent records are thoroughly covered. An invaluable contribution to industrial chemistry.

SCIENCE

Bowley, Arthur Lyon. An elementary manual of statistics. London: Macdonald and Evans, 1915. vi p., 1 l., 220 p. illus. tables. [2. ed.] 8°. (Modern commercial text-books.) SDC

"This manual is intended for the use of those who desire some knowledge of statistical methods and statistical results without going deeply into technicalities or undertaking mathematical analysis. . .

"The first part deals with elementary methods and with such technical terms and ideas as are indispensable in the handling of numbers on a large scale. In the second part the origin of many groups of public statistics is shown, their adequacy is criticised, and some of the more interesting results which are based on them are briefly summarized."—Preface.

Brenier, Henri. Essai d'atlas statistique de l'Indo-Chine française. [Hanoi, 1914.] viii, 256 p. 1°. SDG

Cohen, Julius Henry. Law and order in industry; five years' experience. New York: The Macmillan Co., 1916. xviii p., 1 l., 292 p. 12°. TDG

"This book is written from the standpoint of the citizen and the student rather than from that of the lawyer. With regard to each of the main phases of the modern labor problem—individual and collective bargaining, wages, hours, unemployment, safety and health, social insurance, and administration—it endeavors not so much to expound technical questions of legality as to sketch the historical background of the various labor problems, indicate the nature and extent of each, and describe the legislative remedies which have been applied."—Preface.

Drachmann, Povl. The industrial development and commercial policies of the three Scandinavian countries. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1915. 124, 6 p. 8°. (Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.—Economics and History Division.) TAH

A brief account of the commercial and industrial development of the Scandinavian countries. As the title suggests, the main theme is governmental influence upon economic progress, particularly by means of legislation.

Very full commercial statistics are given.

Edsall, Edward W. The coming scrap of paper. London: George Allen and Unwin, Ltd. [1915.] 187 p. 12°. TF

The currency of Great Britain is nominally on a gold basis; actually on a paper basis, i. e. cheques. Many economic difficulties result from this fundamental contradiction.

The author of this book thinks the dangers of readjustment after the war will be greatly diminished by the abolition of the gold standard and the substitution of some article for which the demand is unchangeable, as wheat. Enough paper money would be issued to keep the price of wheat constant. In this way the stability of the value of wheat will be transmitted to the currency, and fluctuation of prices avoided.

American bankers have for the first time been able to establish foreign branches since the passage of the federal reserve act. Since the outbreak of the European war there have been increased opportunities for trade with South America.

The purpose of this report is to give the American banker some idea of conditions in South America, operating costs, laws, stability of currency, etc. The history of European banks in South America is told in considerable detail.

Moret, Jacques. L'emploi des mathématiques en économie politique. Paris: M. Giard & E. Brière, 1915. 2 p.l., 271(1) p. illus. 8°. T

After a discussion of the reasons and opportunities for the use of mathematics in political economy, the author reviews the history of its use by various economists from 1711 to the present.

Nasmyth, George William. Social progress and the Darwinian theory; a study of force as a factor in human relations. With an introduction by Norman Angell. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1916. xxiii, 417 p. 12°. SB

The doctrine of force as a means of social progress has been widely adopted because of a misinterpretation of Darwin's theories of evolution. The author claims to prove that progress is the result of co-operation rather than of the "struggle for existence."

Nassau, Mabel Louise. Old age poverty in Greenwich village; a neighborhood study. Introduction by Henry R. Seager ... New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. [1915.] 105 p. 12°. (Greenwich House series. no. 6.) SGG

"To the middle ages art was didactic... Through the medium of art the highest conceptions of theologian and scholar penetrated to some extent the minds of even the humblest of people... But the meaning of these profound works gradually became obscure... Symbolism, the soul of Gothic art, was dead... A guide is a necessity. Hitherto there has been no book on this subject."—Preface.

"The peoples whose art-object was formal beauty—the southern, Italians and Spaniards,—offered richer material for our reflections than those to whom the expression of character and natural truth in art seemed more important, the northern, Germans and Netherlanders."—Preface.

*An address delivered before the graduating class of the Library School, The New York Public Library

I THANK you for your invitation to speak here to-day, not only for the compliment that it involves, and the opportunity that it gives me to meet old friends and perhaps to make new ones, but also for a reason that would not have applied in the case of another speaker. To use Dante's reckoning, it is just half a lifetime since I began my library work in this institution, that is, in the Astor Library as it then was. That was the year for which Mother Shipton, at a safe number of centuries distant, prophesied the end of the world. It may be that she called the wrong number, or that the Fates were tempted by the possibility of this splendid Library, and its Library School, and this graduating class; at any rate the year 1916 finds the world still here and still awaiting the Millennium.

In one of those vivid Imaginary Conversations in which Landor recreates for us the mind of past ages, he presents two famous characters, Hooker the great divine, and Bacon after his tragic fall from power. Toward the end of the dialogue Bacon acknowledges that he has won a reputation for wide learning, and even for inspiring others to the pursuit of knowledge, but he adds that there is one subject of some importance that has almost escaped him. Hooker in surprise begs to know what this omitted subject may be, and the philosopher answers, in two words, which close the dialogue, "Francis Bacon."

The year 1776 marks a turning point in our political history not more important than the centennial year marks in our library development. The year 1876 saw the appearance of the great volume on Public Libraries in the United States, issued by the Bureau of Education; the founding of the American Library Association, with its first conference at Philadelphia; the opening numbers of the Library Journal, and that infant prodigy, the first edition of Mr. Dewey's Decimal Classification. During the forty years that have succeeded, the American library world has been not so much developed as transformed. Where before we reckoned in units, we now reckon in tens, or even hundreds, and that not merely in regard to the volumes in our libraries, but also in regard to their readers, their circulation, and their income. Our American librarians have had not only to achieve and superintend this enormous increase, but also to learn how to do it in the very process. They have had to construct for themselves a new library economy on a gigantic scale. It is as if one were to leave port in a schooner and were compelled while crossing the Atlantic to transform the vessel into an ocean liner without any interruption of its voyage, and at the same time to solve all the problems of engineering and navigation involved by the change. In the midst of the vastness and complexity of all these urgent demands, it would not be surprising if the librarian of my generation had been tempted — or if you of the next generation should in your turn be tempted — to overlook the human element in the situation, to forget the Librarian Himself.

It is because I believe this human element to be now and forever the most important, that I have taken this opportunity to remind you that as the future of society depends upon nothing so much as the character of those who are coming forward to be its men and women, so the libraries of America will depend for their success in the years to come, not so much on any other condition as the quality represented by you and the other young men and women who are preparing to take up the burdens which the librarians of to-day will ere long lay down. I have also a personal reason for the emphasis that I place on the Librarian Himself, namely, my pride in my profession. Having known such men of the past as Poole, and Winsor, and Cutter, and Billings — to cite only four — and my great contemporaries who have so nobly carried on their work, I should be unworthy of membership in their profession if I could be content to think of the responsibility for American libraries as in the future entrusted to a less worthy keeping. These men were in their day the equals of the leaders in any other profession. I cannot imagine a group of men in which Dr. Poole, with his splendid soldierly poise, Dr. Winsor, with his intellectual force, Mr. Cutter, with his modesty masking such a wealth of knowledge, and Dr. Billings, with his stamp of leadership, would not have been welcome and honored. I refrain from strengthening my case by referring to the men whom I honor as my contemporaries. To mention only those whose records are closed will be enough to impress upon you the wealth of personality that has marked our profession, and your own obligation, so far as in you lies, to continue it.

What the librarian attains in this respect he attains not more for himself than for his library; and this truth will become so evident that I shall have no need to re-enforce it. Let us consider three respects in which it behooves the coming librarian to remember himself. The first is the fundamental one of the body; and my counsel may be summed in a single injunction: Keep a reserve of force to be drawn upon only on supreme occasions. This means that you will not allow yourselves to work up to the limit of your strength. Work done at the margin of endurance is never so efficient or satisfactory as work done at a safe distance below that margin. No man knows when he is going to be called upon for a supreme effort, and when the time of extra strain comes there should be extra strength to bear it. The strain may be personal, — care, anxiety, or ill health; or it may come in the form of a sudden professional demand. Let me give you two illustrations, the first outside the library field. A young broker of great talent had allowed himself to overwork. An opportunity arose for him to take part in a great enterprise. In order to do so he was obliged to keep himself up by artificial stimulation. When the work was done his strength gave way, and for the next two years he vainly pursued his lost health which was slipping further and further from him; but during this period of incapacity another and far greater opportunity arose for which he might well have neglected the first; and while the new enterprise was being successfully carried out by others, he could only watch them from his death-bed and lament his shortsightedness. The other and happier instance is taken from our own profession. One of our librarians, after a day's hard work, gave himself up to an evening's pleasuring, and returning home from a party at midnight, found upon his table a note directing him to bring to his office the next morning the complete sketch plan of a building for his library, showing size, capacity, and arrangement of rooms. Laying aside his festive attire, he applied himself to his task, from which he arose at breakfast time. At nine o'clock he appeared at his office with the plan as directed; — and you all have or should have seen them in their successful realization. But a librarian who allows himself to work daily on the ragged edge of his strength could never have met successfully that sudden and crucial demand.

The librarian must also give heed to himself on the intellectual side. This advice can of course be transferred to any profession. Years ago a banker friend of mine had an unexpected opportunity to learn Danish. He took advantage of it, and ever since has enriched his life with the great literature of that language. We may be sure that for this mental side-line he is no less a banker and much more a man. Our profession tends so much to brain-scattering that it behooves us more than most others to give ourselves the discipline of concentration. Having to know about almost everything it behooves us also really to know something. What this intensive study shall be, in the case of any one of us, will depend upon our aptitudes and tastes. We may, like my banker friend, take up a language and its literature, we may devote ourselves to some historic epoch or figure, to some literary masterpiece, to some science or art, or at least to a corner of one. If we have the happy endowment, we may find our specialty in some form of creative art, of which the students in this school have before them a successful instance in Miss Plummer's poetry, at once so strong and so fine, and lacking only in quantity. It is in the retirement of such work that we shall find ourselves and shall make ourselves the better worth finding.

A third direction in which the librarian should give heed to himself is in his relation to his community. This is over and above his services to the community as a librarian. The public should know him not merely as a human appendage to a collection of books, but as one of themselves, as a man among men, having interests and powers beyond his library walls. He will have occasion to appear before them in the interests of his library, whether he is lecturing on books, or pleading for larger appropriations; but he should do more than this, he should take his place in his community as one of its foremost citizens. He will so not only benefit his library but also be paying that intangible but real debt that every man owes to his profession.

Thus far, I doubt not, you have agreed with me, even if you have not easily made the application to yourselves. On the latter point I know that you are objecting somewhat in this fashion. He is talking about great men and we are only beginners, with no assurance of ever being great, and, even if we succeed, no one of us will ever be a Winsor, a Poole, a Cutter, or a Billings. My answer is that you are laboring under two illusions, which I will call the illusion of youth and the illusion of sameness. Regarding the first, Emerson has a saying, which I can use even more literally than he meant it. He says: "Meek young men grow up in libraries, believing it their duty to accept the views which Cicero, which Locke, which Bacon, have given; forgetful that Cicero, Locke, and Bacon were only young men in libraries when they wrote these books."

We look at a great man's career in full perspective, but he sees only what has gone before; he knows no more of his future than we do of ours. When Dr. Poole, a senior at Yale, was printing his first Index to Periodicals, he could have had no idea what a vast revolution he was starting in making knowledge accessible. No more could he have foreseen the honorable positions that were to register the stages of his fruitful career.

Of all our great librarians there was none who received such deference from his fellows as Justin Winsor, the first president of the American Library Association, and nine times re-elected to that honor. He was the type of man that one looks upon as born, not only for success, but for early and assured success. Yet there is no career in our library annals that affords more comfort to the tyro as he works his way against discouragement. Justin Winsor was a rich man's son with so little sense of responsibility when a student at Harvard that he was obliged to end his course prematurely. Continuing his studies at Paris and Heidelberg, he returned home to take up nominally the study and practice of law, a profession alien to his tastes, but really to follow false leads in journalism and literature, which left him, fifteen years after his class graduated, a man who had not yet found his place in the world, and who was coming to be looked upon by his family and friends as a failure. In the course of his reading he spent much time in the Boston Public Library, and on account of his acquaintance with the institution he was finally made a trustee. In 1868, when he was thirty-seven years old, occurred the sudden death of the librarian, Dr. Jewett — whom I am proud to claim as my own predecessor at one remove; and the trustees, possibly with some misgivings, made Mr. Winsor his successor. Neither they nor he could have realized at the time what a career that appointment was opening, nor what a standard it was setting to American librarianship.

We all honored Mr. Winsor, and a few who knew him intimately loved him, but we all loved Mr. Cutter. He, too, did not follow a direct course in entering the profession which he afterward so adorned; for, after graduating from college at eighteen, he spent four precious years in studying for the ministry; but he was not ordained, and apparently one year more sufficed to convince him that he had been on the wrong track. So it was five years after leaving college before he took up library work, and fourteen years before he found, in 1869, at the age of thirty-two, his great opportunity, the librarianship of the Boston Athenaeum. Mr. Cutter with his Athenaeum Catalogue, his world-famous cataloguing rules, and his flexible classification, which, though incomplete, has received the high tribute of adoption, with modifications, by the Library of Congress, seems to us all a personality so secure in its enduring fame that we find it hard to realize that he was ever "a young man in a library." In reality, he had not only immaturity to contend with in the beginning, but also a personal handicap. If his superior in those days in the Harvard library had been asked to fill out one of those distressing blanks that are thrust upon us by employment bureaus, I wonder how he would have answered the query in regard to personal appearance. Mr. Cutter had one of the most beautiful faces as regards expression that any man ever possessed, but one only scantily endowed with good looks. When one knew Mr. Cutter, one realized in his presence only the inspiration of a rare soul of singular sweetness, but, like many another great man, he must have felt in youth that his face was a bar to his fortune. I make this intimate reference, as I think my great master would have approved my doing, to instance one of those typical handicaps that cause such discouragement to the young, but which are capable of being so splendidly triumphed over.

So much for the illusion of youth. The illusion of sameness we can discuss more summarily. It is certainly true that no one of my contemporaries has repeated the career of the great man he succeeded; in fact, to have done so would have been to brand himself as not a great man but an echo. Artemus Ward, who was one of the shrewdest of observers, remarked during our Civil War that "George Washington's forte was to not have any public man of the present day resemble him to any alarming extent." Superficially the gibe was warranted; yet at the time of its writing there was one man in America who, while as different from Washington in his appearance and his qualities as one great man well could be from another, yet bore the name that we now always couple with that of Washington. In the deepest sense they were alike, for Lincoln did in his day the work laid upon him, with the same devotion and ability that Washington applied to his. We may therefore say that between them there was the closest resemblance, but no sameness: and it was this illusion of sameness which prevented the keen eye of the great humorist from seeing what was all the time before him. You will be, nay, you must be, worthy successors of the great men of the past and of my great contemporaries, but you will not be the same, and you should never for a moment doubt your capacities because you realize that you cannot be the same. If I may in closing modify a famous line of Wordsworth's, I will say: "Another race is on, with other palms to win." The race is for you to run, the palms will be yours. You will win them for your libraries, for your profession, and for yourselves, and you will win them because you will not be the great men of the past nor the great men of this present, but because you will be men of your own day and generation, and because in the midst of your cares and distractions you will have remembered to become and be yourselves.

CHIAROSCURO PRINTS

THE interest and value of artists' drawings have ever caused makers of prints to busy themselves in their reproduction. There is hardly a process in the reproductive graphic arts that has not at some time served this purpose.

Of particular interest is the so-called "chiaroscuro method," born of the desire to reproduce wash-drawings, drawings executed in a few tones, with or without outlines, with white body color for the high lights. To do this, wood-blocks were engraved, one for each tone, in combination or not with one for the outline. The whites were produced by simply cutting away those portions of the wood, so that they would not print, the resulting white spaces so standing out by contrast to the surrounding color that they seemed whiter than the white paper margin of the print. Sometimes gold took the place of white, as in Cranach's "St. George on Horseback," on a blue tint. Of course, as in all printing from two or more blocks or plates, the impressions being superimposed upon the same sheet of paper, exact "register" was a necessity. The kinship of this method, as a process, to any color-printing from relief blocks, — the Japanese color-print, three-color process prints, or any other — is evident.

"Of chiaroscuro," says W. J. Linton, "we have two kinds; the first drawn<sup>1</sup> with a pen in outlines and cross-hatchings (lines crossed for shading) with high lights in white on a tint, done in two printings; the second without lines, altogether done with a brush, in three or four or more shades of the one colour, — the first of these shades or tints furnishing the contours and strongest shadows, the last supplying the lightest tint with the whites, or high lights." It was in Germany, where Cranach produced prints as early as 1506, that the first method was particularly practiced. This method implied, generally, the use of one block for the design, drawn in pen or pencil, with more or less cross-hatching, as in any drawing for the wood-cutter, and one for a tint (green, brown, gray) with the high lights cut out as described. Moreover, even the high lights, instead of appearing as white masses, were not infrequently laid out in neatly cross-hatched white lines, as one may see in the "Adam and Eve" of Hans Baldung Grün, Burgkmaier's "St. George on Horseback," Wechtlin's "Crucifixion," and Cranach's "St. Christopher."

Ten years after the first dated chiaroscuro print appeared in Germany, Ugo da Carpi (on July, 24, 1516), petitioned the Venetian Signoria for a privilege, as inventor, for a "new mode of printing chiaro et scuro." And Vasari called him the inventor in these words:

"Nor has there been wanting one who has had the enterprise to execute with wood-blocks prints that possess the appearance of having been made with brush after the manner of chiaroscuro, which is an ingenious and difficult thing. This was Ugo da Carpi, who, although he was a mediocre painter, was nevertheless a man of most subtle wit in strange and fanciful inventions. He it was who first attempted, and that with the happiest result, to work with two blocks, one of which he used for hatching the shadows, in the manner of a copper-plate, and with the other he made the tint of colour, cutting deeply with the strokes of the engraving, and leaving the lights so bright, that when the impression was pulled off they appeared to have been brightened with lead-white. Having succeeded in this, Ugo took heart, and attempted to make prints with wood-blocks of three tints. The first gave the shadow; the second, which was lighter in tone, made the middle tint, and the third, cut deeply, gave the higher lights of the ground and left the white of the paper."

If the invention of the first method cannot be claimed for Ugo da Carpi, the second, in which line-work is entirely omitted, owed much to his improvements. This second method was not unknown in Germany, it is true, but it is in Italy that it was developed and flourished. As Kristeller says, Burgkmaier, in prints such as the portrait of Baumgärtner (1512) "even produced pictures without a black line plate, simply by super-printing three different tone plates. But such attempts of wood-cutting in several colors, going beyond the imitation of pen-drawing on tinted paper, with high-lights put on, were quite isolated in Germany." He points out that in Italy the purpose was the imitation of free, broad, wash-drawing, and that the technique was therefore one of surfaces rather than lines. And he sums up: "the essential artistic innovation of Ugo da Carpi lies in this, that the black line plate does not reproduce the whole drawing, but only serves to intensify the deepest shadows at various points."

How these chiaroscuro prints, printed in different tones of one color (brown, gray, green) reflected certain tendencies in the technique of drawing one may readily see by examining drawings by Italian artists of the period; for instance, those in the collection of Mr. J. P. Morgan. Parmigiano's manner, for example, was particularly well rendered in these chiaroscuro cuts.

other artists were rendered by engravers such as J. N. de Vicence, Bartolomeo Coriolano, Boldrini, Andrea Andreani.

In the 18th Century Count Zanetti revived the art with taste, though not with the force of the older workers. He used a number of blocks for a print, gaining richness of effect at times. About the same period, in England, J. B. Jackson utilized the process, also with numerous blocks, and with a certain heavy solidity, as in his portrait of Algernon Sydney; he also sought to put it to practical use by applying it to paper hanging. All this approaches color-printing proper.

In this century was working also Nicholas Le Sueur (1691–1794). “His chiaroscuros printed entirely from wood-blocks,” says Chatto, “are executed with great boldness and spirit, and partake more of the character of the early Italian chiaro-scuros than any other works of the same kind engraved by his contemporaries.” But Le Sueur also engraved woodblocks for the tints for the etchings on copper executed by the Comte de Caylus, Robert and Cochin. A number of these appear in the two famous folio volumes of the “Cabinet Crozat.” These, in their combination of wood-engraving with etching, lead us quite naturally to note the striving for chiaroscuro effect by means of mezzotint or aquatint. Plates by Metz, J. T. Prestel, J. Van der Velde, Schweickart, Arthur Pond, A. Van der Bosch, Kirkall and others, who thus used intaglio processes for this old art of the relief block, may be studied in the Library’s print collection.

In the 19th century the old method persisted in a simplified form. About the middle of the century it was a favorite device to add to a wood-cut a tint of blue or pink or light brown, with high lights cut out. One may see that in not a few American title pages (for instance, the “Ladies’ Wreath and Parlor Annual,” issued about 1850). And the older ones among us may recall theatrical posters, roughly cut on wood, with one tint on which heavy white parallel lines marked the high lights.

Most of the best chiaroscuro work represents what is known as “reproductive engraving,” especially in Italy. Singer and Strang point out that the German artists of that day “invented special drawings, thus raising it to the level of an original art.” In our time, when the use of the reproductive graphic arts as means of original expression (e. g. “painter” or original etching and lithography) is so widespread, the wood-block is also employed by artists, for black-and-white work, for color-work in flat tones, and sometimes for black-and-white with one subdued tint with white high-lights, the last being, of course, a utilization of the chiaroscuro principle. In our country, the work of Rudolph Ruzicka and the book-plates of A. Allen Lewis are examples of this application of an old principle.

There is appended to these notes a list of the chiaroscuro prints in this Library's print room. They serve to give a fairly good idea of the achievements of the art during its period of greatest success, although for some of the finest examples, reproductions — excellent, but still reproductions — must serve. To those particularly interested in chiaroscuro prints, the list clearly indicates what the Library lacks and ought to have. To some of those who have not yet paid much attention to this interesting bypath in the field of prints, the present screed may perchance serve as a guide-post.

AMERICAN PORTRAITURE

IN the Print Gallery in the Central Building, there has been placed on exhibition a collection of prints, loaned by Mr. Charles Allen Munn, illustrating American portraiture of the Colonial and Revolutionary Periods. Besides its very evident historical interest, the exhibition offers also a review of the activities of early American engravers. Its appeal to collectors is evident; rarities it comprises not a few.

The group of notable prints by native engravers includes mezzotints by Peter Pelham and George Graham, and the rare one of Rev. Mr. Jonathan Edwards of New England, and a number of Revolutionary heroes by Edward Savage. The opposite wall is devoted mainly to Washington portraits, among which are two mezzotints by Charles Willson Peale, one by Green after Trumbull, a toile de Jouy (linen) print, and the first engraved portrait of Washington, with a companion piece, Lady Washington.

From the Alexander Campbell plate and other fictitious representations of Washington one passes naturally along the group of John Paul Jones pictures (quite fanciful, most of them), to the array of imaginary portraits published in London and Augsburg during the early days of the Revolution. They were evidently done in response to a demand for portraits of actors in the war of whom no likenesses were known in Europe. They form an interesting contribution to the history of the "fake." So does Paul Revere's Benjamin Church ("worked up" from a portrait of Churchill the poet), shown here with other work by America's noted silversmith.

Finally there are shown a number of series, — the Du Simitière, the "Impartial History," the "Hibernian Magazine," and others.

The exhibition will remain open until October 15.

HENRY WOLF MEMORIAL EXHIBITION

IN the Stuart Gallery (Room 316) of the Main Building there has been opened a memorial exhibition of works by Henry Wolf, recently deceased. Rising with the brilliant period of achievement in American wood engraving in the last century, he remained one of the few left to practice it in recent years. Translating, with suavity and refinement, artists of widely varying styles, he devoted himself particularly to the moderns. And here he reflected also, in terms of his own and with sympathetic appreciation, the finest spirit of the art of his adopted land. In the later years of his life he occasionally sought for original expression on the wood block.

Henry Wolf won various medals and other honors, but his finest reward lay in the discriminating appreciation which was encountered by his aims and accomplishment.

GIFTS

DURING the month of May the Library received as gifts a total of 3,743 volumes, 7,842 pamphlets, 21 prints, and 74 maps. Of these gifts, the following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting: From the Estate of Sidney T. Fairchild, through Mrs. Charles S. Fairchild of Cazenovia, N. Y., the Library received 7 volumes of the Republican Monitor, 1825 to 1841, published at Cazenovia; and from Mrs. Fairchild, a collection of books, pamphlets, broadsides and newspapers, comprising 17 volumes, 19 pamphlets, 47 periodicals, 8 sheets, etc.

From Mr. Louis C. Tiffany of New York came No. 254 of 492 copies, printed upon Japan paper for private distribution, of "The art work of Louis C. Tiffany," Garden City, New York, 1914.

Prof. Brander Matthews of New York gave the Library 17 volumes and 14 pamphlets relating to legerdemain, thought reading, etc.

From Mr. Eben Francis Thompson of Worcester, Mass., came a "Facsimile of a deposition made and signed by William Shakespeare on May 11, 1612, in the suit of Stephen Bellott, versus Christopher Mountjoy, his father-in-law, in the Court of Requests, London"; and 2 copies of a transcription of the same by Eben Francis Thompson (published for the Stratford Society of Worcester, Mass.). This is the earliest known autograph signature of William Shakespeare.

From Mr. M. Hadida of New York the Library received a copy of the "Guia de New York para los turistas Hispano-Americanos, editada par M. Hadida," New York, 1916, first edition; and from the Harvard Club of New York City, a collection of catalogues of American colleges and universities, comprising 988 volumes and 440 pamphlets.

Eleven works were presented to the Library by the authors; and 17 volumes and 34 pamphlets were added to its collection of genealogical material.

ADDITIONS AND USE OF THE LIBRARY DURING MAY, 1916

DURING the month of May, 1916, there were received at the Library 21,335 volumes and 8,760 pamphlets. (These figures include the additions to both Reference and Circulation Departments.) The total number of readers in the Central Building was 69,742. They consulted 192,227 volumes. Visitors to the building numbered 205,601.

LIST OF WORKS IN THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
AND PALÆONTOLOGY OF NEW JERSEY

COMPILED BY GEORGE F. BLACK, PH.D.

Akerly, Samuel. An essay on the geology of the Hudson river, and the adjacent regions: illustrated by a geological section of the country, from the neighbourhood of Sandy-Hook, in New Jersey, northward, through the highlands in New York, towards the Catskill mountains... ## RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Alexander, Magnus Washington. Safety in the foundry. Chicago: National Founders' Association [1915]. 1 p.l., 187 (1) p., 1 pl. illus. 12°. VID

An important compilation based on careful investigations by the Committee of Safety and Sanitation of the National Founders' Association, with the assistance of many experienced foundry managers, foremen and workmen. Passing fads of impractical safety engineers have been eliminated and the recommendations are stated to be reliable. In addition to descriptions of approved safety, lighting, and ventilating devices, there are chapters on protective clothing, safety goggles, first aid, and physical examinations. Very completely illustrated.

Beaumont, Roberts. Standard cloths; structure and manufacture (general, military, and naval). London: Scott, Greenwood & Son, 1916. xvi, 325 p., 4 col'd pl. illus. 8°. VLB

The author, who is one of the best known of British authorities, has examined a large number of typical and other varieties of fabrics and gives in this volume analyses and illustrations, as well as expositions of the principles and schemes of manufacture. Chapter 1 treats of microscopic structure, using some excellent photo-micrographs. Chapter 2 discusses the meaning and application of the term quality. Chapter 3 tells about the synopsis of cloth, while chapter 4 gives some important data regarding specifications for standard grades. The remaining chapters have to do with weaves, types, fabrics light in weight and structure, medium weight woollens, medium weight worsteds, overcoatings, army and navy cloths, fibrous-faced fabrics, and the manufacture of felt. The illustrations, several of them colored plates, are exceptionally good.

Blake, Clinton Hamlin, jr. The law of architecture and building; a consideration of the mutual rights, duties and liabilities of architect, owner and contractor, with appendices and forms. With a special introduction by Aymar Embury II... New York: W. T. Comstock Co. [1916.] xxxviii, 314 p. 8°. VEC

This amplification and revision of material originally published in Architecture, although written in an elementary way for the architect, owner, and contractor, should be of value to the lawyer as well. Fundamental principles are carefully treated and the case citations are comprehensive and thorough. The appendices contain the complete decisions in a number of leading cases, copies of the standard documents approved by the American Institute of Architects, the canon of ethics, and the forms used in lien proceedings.

Bond, Paul Stanley, and M. J. McDouough. Technique of modern tactics, a study of troop leading methods in the operations of detachments of all arms. Menasha, Wis.: G. Banta Pub. Co. [cop. 1915.] xxv, 5-348 p. 2. ed., rev. and enlarged. illus. 8°. VWO

This timely work, adopted by the War Department as a preparation for the War College and as a text-book in garrison and other schools, and also recommended for the use of the organized militia, makes available in a single volume the excellent instruction given at Fort Leavenworth. The new edition embodies the essential modifications contained in the Field Service Regulations for 1914. It includes the solution of map problems and terrain exercises, the transmission of orders, reconnaissance, convoys, artillery and cavalry tactics, the principles of the combat, sanitation and camping—in short, the entire war game.

Bugbee, Edward Everett. A text-book of fire assaying. [Boston: Ranger Co., printers, 1915.] 1 p.l., v, 150 p. tables. 8°. VHO

A concise text-book used in the course in fire assaying at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Bullens, Denison K. Steel and its heat treatment. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, 1916. vii, 431 p. illus. tables. 8°. VIR

Emphasizing the importance of the "human factor," this book is practical with sufficient theory to insure an understanding of principles. Completely and attractively illustrated with many photo-micrographs and charts. Covers the subjects of testing, structure, annealing, hardening, case carburizing and hardening, treatment of the different kinds of steel (including tool steel), pyrometry, and heat generation and application. The data on the principles of furnace construction are particularly noteworthy. The chapter on miscellaneous treatments refers to gears, springs, oil-well bits, safe and vault steel, steel wire, and forgings.

Cushing, Harry Cooke, jr., and NEWTON HARRISON. Central station management. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1916. ix, 397 p. 12°. VGMB

Interesting both for the technical man and the general reader in that it treats of the economic and engineering principles which govern the making of rates for power and lighting. Tells how "new business" is obtained, and has chapters on the scientific lighting of streets and buildings, electric cooking, the use of electricity on the farm, and the possibilities of central station heating. Five chapters are devoted to the economical management of steam-boilers, the work concluding with instructions for the relief of electrical injuries.

Flanders, William Thomas, and others. Galvanizing and tinning; a practical treatise on the coating of metal with zinc and tin by the hot dipping, electro galvanizing, sherardizing and metal spraying processes, with information on design, installation and equipment of plants. New York: D. Williams Co., 1916. 1 p.l., 350 p. 8°. VND

It is stated that the author has had the cooperation of seven well known experts who were broad-minded enough to put the needs of the trade above their personal desire for gain through secrecy. An exceptionally complete and practical work for those engaged in the shop, or in preparing plans for new plants. Has a good trade directory.

pensieren-Kursabsetzen; ein Handbuch für Flugzeugführer und Beobachter. Berlin: M. Krayn, 1915. 3 p.l., (1)6-43 p., 1 diagr. tables. 12°. VDY

A brief handbook by a teacher in the aviation corps of the German navy. Describes the aeronautical compass and its compensation, the laying-down of courses, determination of wind allowance, and the calculation of speed. Provided with several useful tables.

Googerty, Thomas Francis. Practical forging and art smithing. Milwaukee, Wis.: Bruce Pub. Co. [1915.] 144 p., 1 l. illus. 8°. VNG

A text-book written for instructors, professional workers and amateurs by one who has taught decorative ironwork. Beginning with chapters on the use of the forge, welding, etc., it proceeds through the stages of wrought-iron work to the making of door-plates and iron lamps. A generous number of detailed drawings and figures have been included in this adequate and usable little volume.

Harper, Joseph H. Harper's hydraulic tables for the flow of water in circular pipes under pressure, timber flumes, open channels, and egg-shaped conduits, with much accessory information. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1916. 192 p. diagrs. 16°. Desk - Tech. Div.

This handbook aims "to cover the hydraulic field with a network or grill of solved problems, wherein one may find something that will lie tolerably near any question that may arise, regarding the flow of water in either closed or open conduits, with any reasonable assumption of rugosity and with any rational arrangement of grade, in quantities from a small fraction of a foot to several thousand feet per second." Part seven discusses the several well-known formulae, while the twenty-two charts in the appendix show graphically the comparative results.

Henschien, Hans Peter. Packing house and cold storage construction; a general reference work on the planning, construction and equipment of modern American meat packing plants...and a complete treatise on the design of cold storage plants, including refrigeration insulation and cost data... Chicago: Nickerson & Collins Co. [1915.] 310 p., 10 plans. illus. 8°. VOI

This much needed work by an architect who has specialized in this kind of construction is practical and complete, carefully following the requirements of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, the approval of which is necessary for the plans of all new packing plants involving government inspection. It is stated that the chapters on cold storage construction "contain information which heretofore has only been available through a close study and investigation of existing buildings or through scattered descriptions and discussions of this subject in current technical journals." The illustrations are carefully done and there are several double-page plans.

Howe, Henry Marion. The metallography of steel and cast iron. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1916. xxviii, 641 p., 2 diagrs., 25 pl., 12 tables. illus. 4°. VIP

This quarto volume of over 600 pages by one of the best known of American metallurgists "consists of two distinct parts, an introduction to the new science of microscopic metallography, as applied to steel and to cast iron, and an extended study of the very new branch of that science, the mechanism of plastic deformation"—subjects, the application of which forms the basis for the great advances to be expected in the metallurgy of iron and steel. There are many reading references and carefully prepared drawings, including excellent photo-micrographs.

Reviewed in Iron trade review, April 20, 1916.

Jones, Bernard E., editor. Toy making; a practical guide to the making of a number of popular toys... London: Cassel and Co., Ltd. [1915.] 2 p.l., 156 p. illus. 12°. ("Work" handbooks.) VNR

A brief book of instructions for the amateur or small tradesman. There are chapters on wooden cannon which shoot, cycle-skis, railway signals, rocking horses, motor cars (including an armoured car), a camera, a working-crane, and a wheelbarrow. Considerable attention is given to dolls' houses and furniture, with a chapter on dolls' heads. Other main subjects are the finishing of wood and the construction of wooden wheels, as well as a final chapter on the casting of toys in metal. Many illustrations and diagrams. The subject matter has been drawn largely from the periodical Work.

McCullough, Ernest. Practical surveying, for surveyors' assistants, vocational, and high schools. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1915. ix, 401 p., 1 map. illus. tables. 12°. VDE

This practical, simply written manual aims "to meet the needs of students whose mathematical preparation does not extend beyond the arithmetic given in the grade schools," the author undertaking to give necessary instruction in algebra and trigonometry step by step as required.

Morrison, Egbert Richard. Spring engineering; a text-book for engineers, students, and draughtsmen. Sharon, Pa.: the author, 1915. 72 p., 2 l. illus. tables. 8°. VFG

A much needed little work explaining fundamental principles of design, with special chapters relating to the several kinds of springs. Has useful tables.

Muck, F. Die Chemie der Kohle, von Prof. Dr. F. W. Hinrichsen und Dipl.-Ing. S. Taczak. Dritte Auflage von Muck, Die Chemie der Steinkohle... Leipzig: W. Engelmann, 1916. x, 523(1) p. illus. 8°. VHW

The author of this painstaking and complete work died soon after the publication of the second edition (1891). The editors of the third edition have brought together a record of recent developments in the theory and technology of coal classification, testing, and analysis, including the results of investigations by Potonié, Donath, Pictet, and Wheeler, as well as the experiments of Bergius on the production of coal in the laboratory.

Newell, Frederick Haynes. Irrigation management; the operation, maintenance and betterment of works for bringing water to agricultural lands. New York: D. Appleton and Co., 1916. x p., 2 l., 306 p., 8 pl. illus. 8°. VPI

Brings together the practical results of the engineers employed chiefly in the United States Reclamation Service, and answers many of the questions asked by irrigation managers in all parts of the world. The subject is treated mainly from the operator's standpoint, and does not discuss the general subject of irrigation or construction methods.

Sterling, Frank Ward. Internal combustion engine manual. Annapolis, Md.: School of Marine Engineering, U. S. Naval Academy, 1916. 4 p.l., 154 p., 3 diagrs. illus. [3. ed.] 8°. VFM

This concise manual, now in its third edition, is used as a text in the United States Naval Academy and aims to emphasize marine and naval needs. Has a good chapter on the several fuels. In place of the section on gas-producers in the second edition there is up-to-date material on the Diesel engine. The appendix describes the United States Navy two-cycle engine.

Wiles, Robert. Cuban cane sugar—a sketch of the industry, from soil to sack, together with a survey of the circumstances which combine to make Cuba the sugar bowl of the world. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Co., 1916. 3 p.l., 85 p., 6 pl. tables. 12°. VTL

Tells the layman in an entertaining way the salient facts about sugar—its increasing use as a food, something about its manufacture, a comparison of the commercial possibilities of cane as against beet sugar, and the importance of Cuba as a source of supply.

ECONOMICS, SOCIOLOGY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

Belgium (German occupation). Belgien. Land, Leute, Wirtschaftsleben. Herausgegeben im Auftrage des kaiserlich deutschen General-Gouvernements. Berlin: Ernst Siegfried Mittler und Sohn, 1915. 2 p.l., 154 p., 2 maps. 8°. Econ. Div.

A statistical description of the physical characteristics of the country, the population, government, and economic conditions. Section 5 is a topographic description of each province, with a list of towns showing area, population, number of houses, and names of post-offices and railway stations.

Buerklin, Wilhelm. Handbuch des belgischen Wirtschaftslebens mit Einschluss von Belgisch-Kongo und einer Übersetzung der wichtigsten Handelsgesetze des Landes... Göttingen: Otto Hapke Verlag, 1916. xiv, 278(1) p. map, tables. 8°. TAH

A handbook compiled for the use of the German civil government in Belgium. It is in two parts; 1, text, describing the government, industries, commerce, finance, agriculture and business enterprises; 2, statistics of each of these subjects. There is a lengthy classified bibliography.

Cameron, Arnold Guyot. The Torrens system; its simplicity, serviceability and success. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co. [1915.] xi, 122 p., 1 l. 12°. TEM

A collection of articles originally published in the Wall street journal. The author is emphatically in favor of general adoption of the Torrens system in the United States. He shows how the system has been successfully adopted in many foreign countries and several states in America, and gives the opinions of legal writers as to its advantages.

Carter, Roger Neale. Advanced accounts; a manual of advanced book-keeping and accountancy for accountants, book-keepers, and business men. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. [1915.] viii, 980 p. 8°. TM

Civic League of St. Louis. Summary of the present status of all movements for the betterment of St. Louis. Showing also the civic agencies actively interested in each matter, and listing published reports of current value. Prepared for the Civic League by the secretary, August, 1915, for use in the season's work, 1915-16. [St. Louis, 1915.] 13 f. f°. †SER

Colvin, Ian D. The Germans in England, 1066-1598. With map of Hanseatic League. London: "The National Review" Office, 1915. xxxi, 262 p., 1 map. 8°. TLH

It is commonly supposed that relations between Germany and England have always been friendly previous to the present war. The object of this book is to show that there was constant rivalry between England and the Hanseatic League until the time of Elizabeth. The German traders held extensive privileges in England and made use of them to influence both domestic and foreign affairs. They were in part responsible for the Wars of the Roses and gained further power as a result of them. They supplied the money for the Armada and some of their ships carrying munitions for the Spaniards were captured by the English.

Their power was effectively broken by Sir Thomas Gresham.

Haines, Lynn. Your Congress; an interpretation of the political and parliamentary influences that dominate law making in America. Washington: The National Voters' League [1915]. 160 p. illus. tables. 8°. SEF

Published by the National Voters' League for the purpose of calling attention to the way Congress is organized, and to the way in which that organization works for the advantage of politicians and their parties rather than for the good of the country.

Hemenway, Henry Bixby. American public health protection. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Co. [1916.] 7 p.l., 283 p. 12°. SPF

It is easy to demonstrate the value in dollars of an efficient public health department, yet efficiency is rarely attained. The author maintains that less attention should be paid to health laws and more to the men who administer them. He reviews the history of the public health movement in America and discusses the organization of health departments and the training of health officers.

Kirkpatrick, Edwin Asbury. Fundamentals of sociology; with special emphasis upon community and educational problems. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co. [1916.] x, 291 p. 12°. SC

A textbook outlining briefly the "fundamental influences affecting group life and action in its earlier beginnings and in present day life." The book was written because of a conviction that sociology may be of as much value to education as psychology. Therefore education receives most attention and the book is intended primarily for students preparing to become teachers.

McBain, Howard Lee. The law and the practice of municipal home rule. New York: Columbia University Press, 1916. xviii, 724 p. 8°. SER

"In this work...it has been assumed that home rule as a general, political, and more or less abstract concept is desirable; and it is recognized that whether desirable or not it is a legal actuality in one-quarter of the states of the Union and an imminent probability in others. Without sentiment, therefore, and without appeal to all that is picturesquely indefinite in the notion of self-government, this study strikes into the rough and only partly broken field of the applied problems of home rule. The effort has been made to study the cases not only for the legal principles declared but also in the light of the practice both of cities in the making of charters and of legislatures in the enactment of laws... The attempt has been made to set forth the net governmental results of home rule in the states in which it has been put into operation.

"This, then, is the primary object of this work — to wit, that the specific questions that have arisen may be marshaled into review; that the difficulties... which the courts have encountered in construing home rule provisions of constitutions may be understood and appreciated; and that the actual relation in law between the city as an autonomous unit and the state government as its restricted superior may be comprehended to the extent at least to which it has been settled by judicial decree and by charter and statutory practices." — Preface.

Morgan, Alexander. Education and social progress. London: Longmans, Green, and Co., 1916. vi p., 1 l., 252 p. 12°. SSD

Most attempts at social reform begin too late. To be effective they should begin with the child.

The author attributes social diseases to heredity, environment, and defective education. He then takes up education in relation to heredity, environment, and practical life, education and public health, education of defective children, and the place of teachers in social progress.

Reference is made chiefly to conditions in Great Britain, as the author is principal of a school in Edinburgh.

Pérez Triana, Santiago. The Pan-American Financial Conference of 1915. London: W. Heinemann [1915]. 3 p.l., 5–139 p. 8°. TLH

The author was one of the most prominent members of the conference, representing the republic of Colombia. This volume includes an essay on Pan-Americanism, and speeches made at the conference and at other meetings which the delegates attended in their trip through the United States.

Phelps, Edith M. Selected articles on the Monroe doctrine. White Plains: H. W. Wilson Co., 1916. 337 p. 2. ed. 12°. (Debaters' handbook series.) SAD

A comprehensive study of the comparatively new science of educational hygiene. Part 1 covers the general topic of health sociology, the relation between social agencies and public health. Part 2 is composed of essays on the administration of educational hygiene. Medical supervision of schools, school sanitation, physical education and the teaching of hygiene are reviewed in part 3. Part 4 is on the hygiene of the college.

Raymond, William Lee. American and foreign investment bonds. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1916. x p., 1 l., 324 p. tables. 8°. TG

Founded on a series of talks to bond salesmen. The object of the book is to show the principles governing the value of different varieties of bonds. Some account is given of the history of bond issues in the larger countries and the states and cities of the United States.

Reely, Mary Katharine. Selected articles on world peace including international arbitration and disarmament. 2. and enlarged ed. White Plains: H. W. Wilson Co., 1916. xxxiv, 256 p. 12°. (Debaters' handbook series.) SAD

Ripley, William Zebina, editor. Trusts, pools and corporations... Boston: Ginn and Co. [cop. 1916.] xxxiii, 872 p. rev. ed. 8°. (Selections and documents in economics.) TN

A textbook applying the case system to the study of economics. Principles are illustrated by means of the more important instances of combination, as the Steel trust, the International Harvester case and the tobacco monopoly. There are chapters on the amendment of the Sherman act 1914, laws concerning monopoly, the German potash syndicate and the German steel syndicate.

Sharfman, Isaiah Leo. Railway regulation; an analysis of the underlying problems in railway economics from the standpoint of government regulation. Chicago: LaSalle Extension University, 1915. vi, 230 p. 8°. TPG

"One can hardly call Professor Sharfman's book an important contribution to his subject nor a satisfactory text for a general course on railway transportation. But if one wants a brief, clear survey that hits the top of most of the high points in the problem of American railway regulation, the book will have considerable utility." — American economic review, March, 1916, p. 118.

Sparks, Frank M. The business of government. Municipal. Chicago: Rand McNally and Co. [cop. 1916.] xiii, 284 p. 8°. SER

Shows how business methods are taking the place of political methods in municipal government. Takes up the development of different forms of government, i. e., representative system, commission form, city manager, and of various functions of city departments.

Sweden. — Statistiske Central Byrån. Historical and statistical handbook. By order of the Swedish government edited by J. Guinchard. 2. ed. English issue. Stockholm: Gov. Prtg. Off., 1914. 2 v. 8°. *GFI

Part 1. Land and people.

Part 2. Industries.

Bibliography, v. 2, p. 714-727.

A voluminous and profusely illustrated compilation dealing with almost every phase of the national life. Volume 1 includes not only geographical, historical and ethnological notes, but also a description of the government, finance, commerce, education, social conditions, art, and literature. Volume 2 is a detailed account of each industry accompanied by maps, illustrations of machinery, and statistical tables.

"To trace the rise of sundry customs and institutions in this best of cities."

THE HISTORY of The New York Public Library is an instance of a typical phenomenon in American institutions, social, economic, or political; first, many isolated, independent efforts towards a common end — the public weal; then the union of a few of these independent — and wasteful, efforts; the resultant body gradually attracting and consolidating those remaining outside the fold; the outcome justifying itself by a strong, resourceful, elastic whole.

The names of John Jacob Astor, James Lenox, Samuel Jones Tilden — only one a native son of the city of New York — are linked in the name of the library; joined with them in the memory of all that know are the names and deeds of many others whose work at all stages helped mightily to quicken and cherish the growing body.

<sup>1</sup> The gathering of these notes gave me pleasure and recreation some ten years ago and more. I then hoped to have them read for errors by some of the men who had made the Library what it is, and hoped also to expand them after examination of other sources than were then open; but death has prevented the former and pressure of routine duties the latter.

The notes are printed today not because they are in satisfactory form or final shape. They have waited Horace's time and more, and even now should be prefaced by "Printed as Manuscript." Since I have lacked time and ability to eliminate all errors I trust the kindly reader who may chance to glance at these pages will not fail to send me his corrections as rapidly as he notes them. They will be received with due gratitude. — H. M. L.

These annals are an attempt to gather the life-giving memories of these unselfish workers, an essay towards a tribute of respect to their efforts and their ideals. They narrate the growth of the Astor Library, the Lenox Library, the Tilden Trust, the New York Free Circulating Library, and other circulating libraries. Of them all, and of other elements, is composed The New York Public Library, and it, in its earliest form, was made possible by, and came into being because of, the devotion at once unselfish, faithful, farsighted, of the Trustees of the Astor Library, the Lenox Library, and the Tilden Trust.

First of these efforts in point of time was the Astor Library, in inception and formation the work of John Jacob Astor and Joseph Green Cogswell — a New York merchant and a New England school teacher.

Of the life of Astor before the foundation of the library there is no need to speak here; his early struggles, his wonderful success, the impress of the man on the city and nation are known to all. Less familiar sides of his nature are revealed as the project of the library unfolds itself.

Of the life of Cogswell before he devoted himself to the library the following brief summary must suffice. Born in Ipswich, Massachusetts, September 27, 1786, he graduated from Harvard in the class of 1806. After a voyage to India as super-cargo, the study and practice of law in Belfast, Maine, and a married life of little more than a year, he found himself a tutor at Harvard in 1813–1815. The years 1816–1820 he spent in Europe, studying at Göttingen with George Ticknor, and travelling with Edward Everett. Returning to this country he taught geology and mineralogy at Harvard and served as assistant librarian during 1820–1823. In the latter year, with young George Bancroft, he founded the famous Round Hill school at Northampton, Massachusetts. Bancroft withdrew in 1830 and Cogswell carried it on alone for four years more. The work, however, was too much for one man and in 1834 he closed its doors. The next two years were spent with great success in charge of a school at Raleigh, North Carolina, until ill health forced him away in 1836 to enter the family of Samuel Ward, the New York banker. Mr. Ward was then living on fashionable Broadway at the corner of Bond Street, and three of his sons had been pupils at Round Hill. Held by the Wards as a member of the family rather than as an instructor, Cogswell saw much of the best life of the city, and through them met John Jacob Astor, who had given up active connection with business some ten years or so before.

Astor was characterized at this time by Washington Irving, who saw much of him while working on Astoria, as a strong-minded man, restive in retirement because of a lack of creative occupation. Born in 1763, he reached his seventy-fifth birthday in 1837 and had undoubtedly given no little thought as to the disposition of his property and to a fitting testimonial to be left to his adopted country by its richest citizen.<sup>1</sup> Cogswell's part in shaping this testimonial can best be told in his own words.

His first mention of Astor is in a letter to his friend C. S. Daveis of Portland, Maine, on January 2, 1838:

"During my present visit to New York, I have seen a great deal of old Mr. Astor, having dined with him twice at his own house, and three times at his son's. He is not the mere accumulator of dollars, as I had supposed him; he talks well on many subjects and shows a great interest in the arts and literature. I meet Halleck there often, and some other pleasant visitors." (Letters, page 213.)

On the 31st of the same month he wrote to Mrs. George Ticknor in Paris:

"Mr. Ward will not let me go away from New York, telling me every day that I shall soon be wanted here, and that I must wait patiently. . . I have received one fee for professional services since my return, that keeps me in pocket money, so I do not want for bonbons; old Mr. Astor gave me a commission to execute for him in Boston, which cost me a week's time, and gave me a week's pleasure, as time spent in Boston always is to me. On my return he sent me a check for $500. This shows that he was satisfied with my agency, and I trust he will find other services for me to perform. If I understand his movements aright I shall be called upon to aid in one of no small magnitude."

Six months later he wrote to George Ticknor on July 20:

"I must tell you a word of what I have been doing for some months past, or you may think I have been wasting time. Early in January Mr. Astor consulted me about an appropriation of some three or four hundred thousand dollars, which he intended to leave for public purposes, and I urged him to give it for a library, which I finally brought him to agree to do, and I have been at work ever since, settling all the points which have arisen in the progress of the affair. It is now so nearly arranged that he has promised me to sign the last paper to-day, and if so I shall see you in Boston early next week. Had I not foreseen that this object would never have been effected unless someone had been at the old gentleman's elbow, to push him on, I should have left New York long since. It is not made public at present, but I think it will be in a week or two. In the mean while say nothing about it."

Public announcement was made in New York by newspaper paragraphs from Boston, the Evening Post of July 26, 1838, quoting:

"We are happy to learn, from correct information, that a wealthy and liberal citizen of New York has given a princely sum for the establishment of a public library in that city, which is likely to eclipse every other establishment of the kind in the country. We shall doubtless soon be furnished with the details, by the journals of that city."

Two days later it explained as follows:

"The Boston Daily Advertiser, in explanation of an article which we copied from that paper a day or two since, says:

"'Mr. John Jacob Astor, with an enlightened and liberal spirit, which does him immortal honor, has made to the corporation of the city of New York, a donation amounting to $350,000, for the establishment of a Public Library, including a lot of land, most eligibly situated for the erection of a building for the accommodation of the institution.'"

James Watson Webb's Morning Courier of the same date (July 28) had also to rely on the Boston Daily Advertiser for its paragraph on the subject. A possible explanation of this somewhat roundabout method of announcement may be that Cogswell gave the news to the Hales of the Advertiser on his visit to Ticknor, Astor possibly choosing the method for self protection. If so it failed to save him from the inevitable flood of begging appeals, as Cogswell's next letter shows:

"As soon as Mr. Astor heard of my being in New York he sent a messenger into the city, to beg me to call upon him. I went out [to his country house near Hell Gate] the next day and found him very cordial but very feeble. I learnt that he had been beset by innumerable applications for money, in all possible amounts, from five to five thousand dollars, since his great act of munificence had been made known, and that act relied upon, as the ground of hope, in all these claims. This his own penetrating mind had foreseen, and it had induced him to change his intended donation to a legacy. The feeble condition in which I found him disarmed me of all power to urge the matter upon him at present, and therefore the most I can tell you is, that there is no fear about the final result, and no great probability of any immediate steps in effecting it.

"He is desirous of having me with him this winter, and offers a most liberal pecuniary compensation for a portion of my time, leaving me four or five hours daily at my own disposal. If I accede to his proposal it will be in the hope of advancing the great project, and making my time most productive to those to whom it belongs." (October 8, 1838, to George Ticknor.)

"I did not accept Mr. Astor's offer because Mr. Ward showed so much unwillingness to have me leave his home, and he has conferred upon me too many favors, for me to find it in my heart to make him an ungrateful return." (November 15, 1838.)

"I am to dine with Mr. Astor to-day, tête-à-tête, to talk over the affairs of the library seriously. I went to him on Sunday [March 10, 1839], with a catalogue<sup>1</sup> of some books to be sold here on Friday [the fifteenth], some curious, rare, valuable, etc., and said 'These are not books to be found every day, may I not attend the sale, and buy such of them as go reasonably?' This brought on a conversation about the library, when he asked me if he could put the whole affair into the hands of trustees, and be freed from all care and trouble about it. I told him he certainly could, upon which he said, 'Come and dine with me on Tuesday, and I will try to come to a definite conclusion about the matter.' I think he is resolved to go on with it this spring." (To George Ticknor, March 12, 1839.)

"I dined with him on the said day [Tuesday, March 12, 1839], and laid my proposal before him, to which he assented, without objection or condition, except that I should agree to take care of the books, and this, of course, I agreed to do. The books went high [at the sale of March 15], and those I most wanted were not in the best condition, so I bought only a few hundred dollars worth. Since then I have advised him to allow myself, or some one else, to buy books at any time when they could be had, on good terms, if suitable to the library to be formed by him, and I have now carte blanche for so doing. I have also told him that it was important that a perfect system should be drawn out for the completion of the whole affair, not merely with reference to the library building, and other accommodations, but also to mark, as distinctly as possible, the character of the library to be formed, and the particular departments which he would wish to have most thorough, and even going so far as to make a catalogue of that portion which must necessarily belong to it. To all this he gave full assent, and requested me to employ my leisure time, if any such I could find, upon the work. Touching the building he is waiting only for the new corporation to enter upon their duties [Isaac L. Varian elected mayor in April]...at any rate he has authorized me to obtain an estimate of the costs of such a building as I have proposed to him." (To Ticknor, May 6, 1839.)

Astor's plan, in May 1839, evidently was a gift outright and forthwith; within the next three months he changed his mind and, by a third codicil to his will on August 22, set aside four hundred thousand dollars as a bequest for the establishment of a public library "to be accessible at all reasonable hours and times, for general use, free of expense to persons resorting thereto, subject only to such control and regulations, as the Trustees may from time to time exercise and establish for general convenience"; specifying the location as the corner of Lafayette Place and Art Street (now Astor Place), fixing the sum to be expended for books at one hundred and twenty thousand dollars and naming as trustees Washington Irving, William B. Astor, Daniel Lord, jr., James G. King, Joseph G. Cogswell, Fitz-Greene Halleck, Henry Brevoort, jr., Samuel B. Ruggles, Samuel Ward, jr., and the Mayor of the city of New York and the Chancellor of the State, ex officio. The fifth codicil, March 3, 1841, changed the location of the library site from the corner of Lafayette Place and Astor Place to a plot of sixty-five feet front and one hundred and twenty-five feet depth on the south side of Astor Place, or, if the Trustees chose, to a plot on the east side of Lafayette Place, sixty-five feet front and one hundred and twenty feet deep. This codicil further fixed the amount to be spent for the building at seventy-five thousand dollars, while the sixth codicil, of December 15, 1842, added the name of Charles [Astor] Bristed to the list of Trustees.

On September 5, 1839 Cogswell wrote to Ticknor:

"Mr. W. B. Astor came in yesterday to ask me if I could leave home for four months, to see his son well placed abroad. My answer was 'if your father will give me a commission to buy books enough to make a fair beginning for the library, and at the same time authorize me to procure a plan abroad, and look into the subject generally, I will go.' Accordingly I have been to Hell Gate this morning to see the old gentleman, who answered that he was ready, and desirous of going on, having completed his new codicil, by which he has increased the appropriation to $400,000. As yet, however, I have no commission from him."

"I do not want to go to Europe a bit, and nothing would have induced me to undertake the expedition but the hope of making it operate to bring the old gentleman to a decision about the library, and so far I am satisfied. . . as he has assured me that he should put $60,000 at my disposal, if I saw fit to use that amount in purchasing one or two libraries now known to be for sale abroad. As yet I have not got the papers in hand signed, but he read me a letter yesterday, directed to myself, in which this is clearly stated." (To C. S. Daveis, October 8, 1839.)

He spent the winter of 1839-1840 in Europe, reporting on his return that he had had an agreeable trip but had not succeeded in one of the objects of his trip: securing the Boutourlin collection which had been in the market since about 1831. It was held at fifteen thousand pounds sterling, and was brought to the hammer about the time he reached Paris. He could find no one with authority to stop the sale. However, "it matters not," he wrote to Daveis, "for we can doubtless obtain those parts of it most valuable to us, in this country, in another way." (Letters, page 223.) Charles Sumner wrote to G. W. Greene, United States consul at Rome: "Cogswell has come abroad again...to purchase the Boutourlin library. Mr. Astor is about founding a public library in New York, and this library was to be the basis of it, but unfortunately it is already under the hammer in Paris, selling piece-meal, and Cogswell has abandoned the purchase." (Pierce's Sumner, volume 2, page 131. December 30, 1839.)

Not long after his return Cogswell wrote to Ticknor (May 27, 1840):

"I spent Monday night out at Hell Gate with Mr. Astor, and then laid before him in writing my project for forming a catalogue of 100,000 volumes, for a well digested, systematic library, accompanied with the prices of books according to the trade rates, and also as marked in the lists of the antiquarian dealers, setting forth, as clearly and distinctly as I was able, the utility and necessity of such a catalogue. He expressed himself perfectly satisfied with the reasons given in the document, and ready to commit the work to me, if I would live in his family [Ward had died on November 27, 1839, during Cogswell's absence in Europe], and let him have, as he was pleased to consider it, the benefit of my society. I then proposed to reduce the matter to a distinct question of business, and offered him five hours of my time daily, for $1,500 a year, with a convenient office in town, my regular business to be working for the library in some way or other, particularly on the catalogue, and he having the right to an occasional appropriation of an hour or two as he might desire. I do not like this altogether, but I will submit to anything to get the main business once nailed, and I know him well enough to say with confidence that, once started, he will be as eager as one could wish, to press on. I left my proposition with him in writing, and expect his answer from day to day. I have done my duty in the matter, and shall have no occasion to reproach myself, be the result what it may; and I am determined to await his movements no longer than to give him a reasonable time to consider my proposition."

Four months later he wrote to Ticknor (September 15):

"I was meditating a descent upon you in Boston early in July, and about the same time Mr. Astor had a fresh fit of stirring in the Library. He got Irving there, and sent for Brevoort and myself from day to day for a week; at length the whole thing was arranged, as I supposed; the plan of the building was agreed upon, and I left him on Saturday evening, July 11, in full confidence that he would authorize his son William (who was present, and earnestly urged his going on) to make contracts for the materials, etc., the next Monday. On that day I started for Geneseo, where I remained about a fortnight. On my return I found the whole form knocked into pi. Upjohn, the architect, had been to see him, and put a notion of a Gothic building into his head, and the moment an excuse was afforded him for hesitation, he yielded to what has now become the weakness of his age, and shrunk from a decision."

In November, 1840, Cogswell accepted Astor's proposal and took up his residence with him at 585 Broadway, moving to the country house at Hell Gate in the summer, sometimes living with William B. Astor next door to the father, sometimes with a downtown office at 54 Gold street. With little modification this arrangement continued until Astor's death, though for a time the appointment of Washington Irving as American minister to Spain and his wish to take Cogswell along as secretary of legation bade fair to interrupt it. Cogswell wrote to Daveis on February 24, 1842:

"I have fully made up my mind to become a diplomatist if the opportunity is offered. Mr. Astor is very much against it, being very reluctant to have me leave him, but that I should have done at any rate, if he kept on as undecided as ever about his library." (page 229.)

"Mr. Astor is greatly distressed at my leaving him, thinking that for a public object as important as is that of the immediate execution of his library plan I should have been justified in declining the appointment, as I gave no previous pledge to accept. I told him I would give up the Secretaryship if he would engage to begin at once upon the library, and that unless he did so I should certainly accept it. All the reply I got to the proposition was 'say what consideration will induce you to stay with me, and leave the question of the library to my future decision,' to which I had but one answer to make, 'none whatever.' The matter, therefore, may be considered as settled, and I have not a reproach to fear from my own conscience that I have abandoned the project too soon. Nothing short of a miracle will induce him to undertake it during his life." (To Ticknor, March 10, 1842.)

The miracle seemed about to happen, for two weeks later (March 28) he wrote to Ticknor:

"Do not cry out upon me for fickleness, when you read that I am not going to Spain. I have made the sacrifice of honors to honor... At the last moment Mr. Astor agreed to all that I asked of him: to go on immediately with the library, to guarantee to me the librarianship with a salary of $2,500 a year, as soon as the building is finished, and, in the mean while $2,000 while engaged upon the catalogue, or otherwise employed... Irving not only consents, but fully approves." (page 231.)

"Immediately after the 1st of April I began with him about the building, when he got together architects, masons, contractors, etc., and, just as all seemed to be going on rightly, he got into one of his nervous fits, and, as yet, I have not been able to bring him back to the work again. Whatever may be the issue I shall have nothing to reproach myself with in relation to it. I have made a sacrifice of my own pleasure, comfort, and standing in life, to secure this object for the cause of good learning in our land, and in no case will its blood be upon my head." (To Mrs. Ticknor, May 3, 1842.)

Thus matters stood for the next six years, Cogswell living with or near Astor and working on plans for the library as opportunity offered.

Mr. Astor died on Tuesday, March 29, 1848. His will was admitted to probate on April 3, and proved on the 9th following. The first meeting of the Trustees was called by W. B. Astor on May 20, 1848 at his residence, 587 Broadway; at that time nine were present, Irving, W. B. Astor, Lord, King, Cogswell, Halleck, Ruggles, Ward, and Bristed. William Frederick Havemeyer, elected Mayor in the spring elections of this year, was not present, nor was Reuben Hyde Walworth, Chancellor of the State, whose office had been abolished by the new constitution of 1848. Henry Brevoort had died May 17, 1848.

Of Irving and his position in American thought and letters it were needless to speak here. William Backhouse Astor was John Jacob's eldest son. Daniel Lord, a native of the city, was one of the foremost civil lawyers of his time. James Gore King, banker and public spirited citizen, is remembered for his earnest advocacy of the Erie railroad, of which he served long as president. Joseph Green Cogswell, Harvard graduate, scholar, bibliographer, first superintendent of the library, was accurately described by George Bancroft as the one, above any other man in America, with the gifts, disposition, and acquirements that singled him out "as the fittest person to superintend the laying of the foundations of what should and must become the great library of the western continent." The poet Halleck was at this time fifty-nine years of age and had been in Astor's office since 1832; after the death of the latter he retired to his birth place, Guilford, Connecticut, offering his resignation to the board of trustees on May 29, 1849, and being succeeded by Rev. Thomas House Taylor, native of Georgetown, South Carolina, and rector of Grace Church from 1834 until his death in 1867. Henry Brevoort, jr., son-in-law of the founder, had died on May 17, 1848, and was succeeded by Gen. John Adams Dix, elected December 30, 1848. Samuel Bulkley Ruggles was a native of Guilford, Connecticut, in the highest ranks of the lawyers of his day, an earnest advocate of the Erie canal and other public movements of like importance. Samuel Ward — Samuel Ward, jr., when named as trustee in the third codicil in 1839 — son of Samuel Ward of Prime, Ward & King, pupil of Cogswell and Bancroft at Round Hill, Columbia graduate, son-in-law of William B. Astor, brother of Julia Ward Howe, uncle of F. Marion Crawford, epicure, prince of lobbyists, was soon to leave New York for his California and European and Washington adventures. Charles Astor Bristed, grandson of the founder, was at this time 29 years of age, and his name is too well known as writer and man of the world to need further mention.

At this first meeting of the trustees on May 20, 1848, business was commenced by calling King to the chair; Lord, as one of the acting executors of the will, read the codicil by which the library was founded, with the clauses in the fifth and sixth codicils supplementary thereto. William B. Astor then read a letter of May 15, received by him from Reuben Hyde Walworth, late Chancellor of the State, in answer to the notification of the present meeting sent to him in capacity of Chancellor two days previously, in which letter Walworth stated his inability to act as trustee in respect to his office by reason of the provision of the new constitution under which that office ceased to exist. The trustees present severally consented to accept the trust conferred upon them; at the suggestion of King, the chairman, they then agreed to enter upon their minutes resolutions expressing their sense of the honor conferred upon them by the testator and the enduring respect and gratitude due his memory from his adopted city. Irving, Halleck, and Lord were appointed a committee to prepare the resolutions. Cogswell was appointed Superintendent of the library, with authority, until otherwise ordered, to convene the trustees and to preside over their meetings. William B. Astor, Ruggles, and Bristed were appointed a committee to examine the two sites open to their choice — southerly side of Astor Place or easterly side of Lafayette Place — and to report as to the comparative advantages of each; and Mayor Havemeyer, Ruggles, and William B. Astor were appointed a committee to apply to the legislature for an act of incorporation.

The name of "The Astor Library" was chosen for the institution at their second meeting on June 1 following and at this same meeting they chose Walworth to take the place of Henry Brevoort, deceased. This second proffer he declined on the 9th, on the ground that he intended to remain at Saratoga Springs and could not be present at their meetings in New York.

On September 28, the committee appointed for the purpose recommended the site on the eastern side of Lafayette Place in preference to the plot of equal size on the southern side of Astor Place, facing the then opera house, now the site of the Mercantile Library. They preferred the former "as equally convenient for all public purposes, and as affording the comparative quietude and retirement which are desirable for an institution of constant resort for study and for the consultation of authorities in literature and science." The plot was valued at $25,000, which sum was deducted from the $400,000 of the endowment.

On October 28, Cogswell was authorized to go to Europe to purchase books to the value of $20,000. The distracted political state of Europe at the time seemed to offer peculiar advantages for purchases at low rates, a belief fully justified by Cogswell's success on this first visit for the library. At the sixth meeting of the trustees on November 1, just before he sailed, he reported that he had purchased, during Mr. Astor's lifetime, books to the amount of $2,500, which volumes were stored in five cases in the building at 587 Broadway.

Cogswell's trip is best described in his letter to the Literary World of New York, dated January 26, 1849:

"I reached London on the evening of the 27th of November, and since that time I have spent all the daylight hours of every day in book-hunting and book buying, and all the evening hours in seeing what I had done and what I should do next. . . . The sale of the Stowe library during my stay in London has afforded me a fine opportunity for learning the booksellers' estimate of the value of books, particularly of the more important ones. . . . The Astor Library gets the princeps 'Homer' [from this sale], which sold for twenty-nine pounds, a less sum than any copy has been known to fetch for a long while. . . . There are but two other first editions which I am anxious to have for the Astor Library: one is the 'Mazarin Bible,' which I despair of obtaining, the other 'Shakespeare,' which I am resolved to have. . . . In my selections, I am governed more by intrinsic value than by the accident of rarity, believing that the Astor Library should be a learned and a useful one, rather than a mere museum of curiosities, and in so doing I am acting in conformity with my instructions from the Trustees. I am happy to state to you that the library is now growing rapidly. We already number on our catalogue above ten thousand volumes; among them many costly works, of which few or no copies as yet are found in our libraries. . . . I think I may say that no one department of learning has been overlooked in laying the foundation for a library, which I trust, will one day have all its chasms completely filled up." (Letters, pages 244-249.)

When the State legislature met in January 1849 the library was deemed of sufficient importance to receive a paragraph in the message of Governor Hamilton Fish.<sup>1</sup> The act of incorporation was passed on January 18. It fixed the number of trustees at eleven, named Irving, Astor, Lord, King, Cogswell, Halleck, Ruggles, Ward, Bristed, and the mayor of the city, ex officio; defined their duties and powers, specified the investment of library funds, the mode of choosing officers and filling vacancies in their number, exempted from taxation the property of the institution, and required the trustees to make to the legislature in January of each year a report for the calendar year preceding, detailing the condition of the library, the funds and other property of the corporation and its receipts and expenditures. The trustees declared their acceptance of the act on February 14, 1849, and on that date chose Irving for president and Ruggles for secretary. Irving held the office of president until his death ten years later and Ruggles continued as secretary until 1876 when he retired at the age of seventy-six to give way to a younger man. On March 28, 1849, William B. Astor was chosen treasurer, but he resigned on April 4 following when Daniel Lord was appointed to the office, which he held till the time of his death in 1868.

By the terms of the will not more than $75,000 was to be spent for the building and $120,000 was to be spent for purchase of books and other fittings. Of the endowment one-third was payable a year after the death of the testator, one-third the year following, and the remainder, in equal sums, in the fourth and fifth years after his decease. The first installment, amounting to $133,706.67 was received on April 25, 1849, of which sum $25,000 was held against payment to Mrs. Langdon, daughter of the founder, for the site of the building. The site had been recommended to the trustees by William B. Astor, Ruggles, and Bristed on September 28, 1848, selected by the trustees on November 2 following, and was deeded to them by the executors on April 19, 1849 (deed recorded on June 13, following). In April the trustees hired for two years the dwelling house at 32 Bond Street for temporary custody and exhibition of the books they had purchased, a portion of which had been received from Europe and stored for several weeks by the owners of the vessels in which they had been imported. The volumes were arranged at 32 Bond Street on temporary shelves and in cases, filling the whole lower story and part of the second. The trustees stated in their first annual report their "regret that the limited accommodations [a phrase worked into the souls of their successors for over half a century] the building affords do not enable them to extend to the public the necessary facilities for using the library as freely as is desirable, and that this difficulty cannot be wholly obviated until the library edifice shall be erected. But they have taken pains to make it generally understood that, in the mean time, all persons desirous of resorting to the library and of examining books, may do so with all the convenience which it is in the power of the trustees to afford." At this time the total number of books in the library was estimated at over 20,000 volumes, including $2,500 worth purchased by Cogswell during Astor's lifetime; the total amount paid by the treasurer at this time on the book account was $27,009.33. This report was accompanied by a list of 59 titles presented up to the end of 1849, and it stated that the preliminary catalogue of books already purchased or designed to be purchased, prepared by Cogswell as a guide for his use, was then in the press, 500 copies having been ordered to be printed on September 26, 1849. On his trip abroad Cogswell had paid £4,352, 8s.; he had been authorized to spend $20,000, and to reduce the total to this limit he offered to take on his own account six items amounting to £250, namely — the first folio Shakespeare, £76, Homer (first edition, Florence: Demetrius Chalcondylas, 1488, 2 volumes) £30, Silvestre's Paleographie, £46, an Antiphonary, £60, Lambert's Genus Pinus £24, 19 s., Bateman's Orchidaceæ of Mexico £12, 12 s. He also offered to take all duplicates in the collection and to give in exchange an equivalent from the books he had previously bought with his own money with a view of offering them to the trustees. On September 26, Dix and King, to whom the offer had been committed, recommended that the six titles above noted should be kept for the library and that Cogswell be paid for them at cost; duplicates in the collection were valued at $471.51, the items offered by Cogswell at $500, and the difference was ordered to be paid to him.

At the meeting of the trustees on March 28, 1849, Cogswell was authorized to advertise for plans for the library building and to offer premiums of $300 for the most satisfactory plan and $200 for the next in merit. The advertisement in the Evening Post of March 30, called for plans for a building of sixty-five feet front and one hundred and twenty feet in depth; they were to be submitted to Cogswell at 587 Broadway on or before April 24 following. The project aroused wide interest, inquiries coming from the south and east, but the time allowed was too short; on April 13 the board extended it a week, to May 1. When the plans, thirty in number, were examined, many were found to possess considerable merit, though none was wholly satisfactory. The board agreed, however, to award the premium of $300 to Alexander Saelzer, and the second sum of $200 to James Renwick, jr. After conference between Cogswell and Saelzer the plans submitted by the latter were provisionally adopted (on June 13 following), the architect's compensation fixed at $1,000 — increased to $1,500 on June 27 — and employment of an inspector authorized at $750.

The limitation of the cost of the building at $75,000 caused no little embarrassment; the trustees wanted a building to hold 100,000 volumes at the outset, to afford convenient accommodation for annual additions, to be fireproof and of the necessary solidity, — requirements by no means easily secured for this sum. Astor, Cogswell, and Saelzer drew up specifications and called for bids for construction on the lines proposed; when these bids were opened it was found that all exceeded the limit, the lowest, by contractors whose ability to finish the work was by no means satisfactorily established, amounting to $81,385.75, and the highest, though by thoroughly satisfactory contractors, being $107,962. The architect was instructed to modify his plans to reduce the cost, which proved an unsatisfactory proceeding for both parties, so unsatisfactory that the trustees at one time resolved to abandon Saelzer's plans and to confer with other architects. At length, however, Saelzer's plan was reworked, adopted finally on December 10, 1849, and for this plan the construction bid of $75,000, by Peter J. Bogert and James Harriot, was accepted on January 2 following.

Work of excavation began at once, the corner-stone being laid on March 14, 1850. It was hoped to have the building completed by April, 1852, but sickness of the architect, the severe winter of 1851-1852, changes and modifications in the plan, and other delays hindered completion until the summer of 1853. Long before this time it had become evident that the limit of $75,000 was an impossible one. William B. Astor bore the expense of $1,590 for groined arches to render the structure more secure from fire, and shelving and apparatus for heating and ventilating were paid for to the amount of $17,141.99 from surplus interest accruing from the funds while the building was in progress and from the premium realized by the advance in market value of United States bonds.

The end of 1852 saw the structure practically complete, but to expose the books to any danger of damp walls was deemed unwise. Consequently the trustees determined to move the books from 32 Bond Street in April, 1853, hoping to open the library for public use in May following. Various delays prevented fulfilment of this hope, however, and it was not until late in 1853 that they could fix the date of opening. On November 30, they adopted regulations, seven in number, for the use of the collection.

These regulations provided that the building should be opened to the public on January 9, 1854; for that month no books were to be consulted but visitors would be welcome. On February 1, use of books was to begin. The hours were fixed at from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. except on Sundays and established holidays. It was to be a reference library solely, no books to be taken from the building for any purpose. Admission was to be free for all persons over fourteen years of age.

Cogswell made his first trip abroad for purchase of books in the winter of 1848-1849, spending something over $20,000. The remainder of 1849 and all of 1850 were spent in New York working at plans, specifications, etc., for the building. Until this was completed the trustees felt it unwise to buy extensively, contenting themselves during 1850 with sparing purchases whenever advantageous. In their second annual report (for the year 1850) they gave the number of volumes as 28,364, the cost of purchasing and binding being slightly over $35,000.

On February 19, 1851, they authorized Cogswell to make a second foreign trip, to buy to the amount of about $25,000. He sailed soon after for England, and went at once to London, where he found prices had advanced so materially that he determined to try continental book marts before making extensive English purchases. During the summer he scoured France, Italy, the Netherlands, Denmark, Scandinavia, Germany — this at the age of sixty-five. The result was an addition of 28,000 volumes secured for $30,000, bringing the total of the collection to about 55,000 or 60,000 volumes, and the total outlay to about $65,000. He felt that the trip justified fully his expectations as to the number and character of works so secured and that even if the actual financial return had not been so successful, in other respects the trip would have been well worth while. "It enabled me to form a personal acquaintance with the leading book sellers in the places visited, made me more familiar with the book trade, and with the libraries abroad, and afforded me an opportunity of making our own institution more widely known than it had been before. It was very gratifying to hear men like Humboldt, and Bunsen and Lepsius speak of it as an institution, in which the world was interested, and to find many persons desirous of offering some valuable volume or volumes to enrich its collection. Within a few years a great number of important and costly scientific, statistical and historical works have been published by direction and at the expense of the different governments of Europe, which we might have gratuitously, I have no doubt, if application were made for them through the proper channel. This expectation is based on the fact that the Astor library is universally free to foreigners as well as citizens, and on this ground it is especially entitled to favor. In the few instances in which the request has been made, it was promptly granted. Through the kindness of the Right Honorable Edward Ellice, M.P., application was made, in behalf of the library to the Record Commission, for the volumes of documentary history, published under their direction at the cost of the British government, and an order immediately obtained for every work of which any copies remained on hand. With like readiness, the important statistical works published by the Danish government were given to the library, on application through Justitsraad Bölling."

He returned in November 1851, and spent the next year in working over his index to the collection, partly printed and partly manuscript; in checking, shelving, and classifying the purchases. By November 1852 it was evident that the building would not be in condition to receive the books for several months, and he was again authorized to try the European markets, $25,000 being put at his disposal. He sailed early in December, and remained abroad until March following, spending his time mainly in London, Paris, Brussels, Hamburg, and Berlin. The result was the addition of about 25,000 volumes, including a mathematical library of 3,000 volumes secured in Berlin and a philosophical and miscellaneous collection of between four and five thousand pieces bought in Florence. The trip itself he characterized as "the hardest three months I have had since I began the work." Physically he stood it well, however, and soon after his return was able to state (March 26, 1853) that "the books are more than half moved over to the new building, and the rest may easily be got out in a week."

His ability as a book buyer forced even John Hill Burton to pay him the following tribute in his Book-Hunter:

"Dr. Cogswell, the first librarian of the Astorian [library], spent some time in Europe with his princely endowment in his pocket, and showed himself a judicious, active, and formidable sportsman in the book-hunting world. Whenever, from private collections, or the breaking-up of public institutions, rarities got abroad into the open market, the collectors of the old country found that they had a resolute competitor to deal with — almost, it might be said, a desperate one — since he was in a manner the representative of a nation using powerful efforts to get possession of a share of the literary treasures of the Old World. . .

"... I know that, especially in the instance of the Astorian Library, the selections of books have been made with great judgment, and that, after the boundaries of the common, crowded market were passed, and individual rarities had to be stalked in distant hunting-grounds, innate literary value was still held an object more important than mere abstract rarity, and, as the more worthy quality of the two, that on which the buying power available to the emissary was brought to bear." (New York, 1863. pages 179, 181.)

His own statement of the principles that guided him in selection was:

"The wants of the community, as far as ascertained, was the ground work of the selection, and next the supplying of deficiencies in the previously existing libraries of the city. The selection has been made with due regard to the claims of every department of learning, and without giving preference to any one to the prejudice of another. I make this statement with great confidence, knowing how uniformly it has been my aim. But as books in some departments are more costly than in others, and as it is in the most costly that the wants are greatest, large sums have necessarily been applied to works of that description, including those on civil engineering, public improvements, architecture, and the arts generally, and the voluminous accounts of the voyages and researches for scientific, geological and archæological discoveries. All of these belong to the class of subjects of particular interest in the present day, and form an indispensable part of the collections of a public library. Ours is now rich in them. It is also well provided with the transactions of the learned societies; with works on natural history in all its divisions; on the mathematical and physical sciences; on civil history and its kindred branches, with good collections in general literature, both ancient and modern, and is approaching towards a full apparatus of grammars, vocabularies, dictionaries, and other facilities for acquiring the various languages of the earth. The last named class is becoming one of great importance to Americans. The position we now occupy brings us into near relation with countries formerly the most remote, and makes the study of languages one of practical utility as well as of necessity, for the learned inquirer into the origin and affinities of the various tribes of the human race. It may be thought, perhaps, that the learned professions have not been borne in mind, as fully as the other departments in our collection as thus far formed, but it should be recollected that the library is bound to preserve its character as a general one, and hence cannot be expected to be made as complete in any speciality, as those which are established exclusively for such a purpose. It may be added, that it has repeatedly invited suggestions from professional gentlemen, of books deemed by them valuable and desirable in the collection, and that when made they have invariably been attended to. As respects the completion of special departments, it may be remarked that this desirable condition of the library can only be hoped for when they shall be made the objects of the fostering care of individuals whose studies and tastes are so directed. The funds of the library cannot properly be so applied, until it is brought much nearer completion as a general collection. Acting under this conviction, and knowing the necessity of a complete bibliographical apparatus for the proper performance of my own duties, I asked to be allowed to provide for the speciality of my own individual charge; it was kindly granted to me, and I have now the satisfaction of seeing the object so nearly accomplished that the collection is entitled to be called a well furnished bibliographical library. A thousand volumes have been added to it during the past year, and its whole number is now above two thousand." (Annual Report for 1851, p. 5-6.)

The end of 1853, as stated before, saw the building completed, and the books in place; competition for plans had been authorized March 28, 1849, drawings were submitted May 1 following, Saelzer's plans adopted December 10, 1849, contract for erection let January 2, 1850, corner-stone laid March 14 following, the next three years being required for erection and completion. The building was opened for public examination on January 9, 1854, stocked with between 80,000 and 90,000 volumes, purchased at a cost of about $100,000, of which sum, $3,000 had been furnished by the founder during his lifetime and $7,500 represented a portion of a credit of £2,500 provided by William B. Astor for purchase of works on the industrial arts.

The Evening Post of January 10, 1854 contained the following notice of the opening:

"The opening of the Astor Library, in Lafayette Place, to the masses, was the great event in this city of yesterday. During the whole day the beautiful hall was filled with a constantly changing throng, who looked with delight upon the magnificent facilities there afforded for the pursuit of knowledge. We may observe here, that the number of books in the collection exceeds, by some eight or nine thousand, the estimate given by Mr. Cogswell, making the number nearer 90,000 than 80,000.

"The books will be ready for general use, though not to be taken from the building, by the first of February. Meanwhile, several further accommodations must be supplied. A reading room, with newspapers and reviews, and a catalogue containing the regulations, will be furnished. It is also intended soon to introduce gas pipes, so as to accommodate those who can only visit the library at night. Until then, the public will be excluded after four o'clock in the afternoon.

"It is a satisfactory reflection to the citizens of New York, and one greatly to the credit of Mr. Cogswell [sic], the collector, that a library so large, and so complete in all its parts, has never before been put in order within anything like the same time. The library at Göttingen is the only one in the world on exactly the same plan. But in that case, with every facility, six years were employed in getting together 30,000 books, only about a third the number to be found in the Astor collection.

"After all, we suspect, from the plan adopted, of keeping the books for consultation and reference, and prohibiting their circulation out of doors, the library may not prove so extensive in its benefits as was at first hoped. Our people are too fond of excitement, and too wearied after their daily toils to spend much of their time in solid reading, even at home; and the idea of walking to the Astor Library for such purpose requires a keener zest for study than experience has shown them to possess. Still the advantages to scholars and literary men, and, through them to the city at large, must be very decided, and abundantly justifies the munificence of Mr. Astor."

Cogswell's own impressions of these first days are strikingly given in a letter to Ticknor of January 18:

"The Library has been open now about ten days, and harassing days they have been to me, — one unbroken string of questions from morning till night, requiring constant and wearying repetition of the same answers. At nine a. m. I take my stand inside the railing and there I remain as a fixture until half-past four. They all look wistfully at the books and ask, 'Can't we go into the alcoves and up to the second story,' and, when I answer, 'No,' they break out into a railing accusation. But it's no use, I tell them, 'You can't do it.' I know not what I should have done if I had not hit upon this plan of a close corporation. It would have crazed me to have seen a crowd ranging lawlessly among the books, and throwing everything into confusion."

The remainder of the month allowed the novelty to wear off for the sight-seeing public and to reduce visitors, when it was opened for the use of books, to the students for whom it had been collected. The story of its first real use is thus told by the Morning Courier of February 9:

"The Astor Library is the only one in the United States, of considerable extent, from which books are not lent out, and in which they are used exclusively for reference and consultation. It is also the first experiment in a great city of an unlimited free library; and as it has just gone into operation upon this system, it may be a matter of some interest to know just how far it promises to answer the purposes of its founder in establishing it.

"In accordance with a previous announcement in two of the city morning papers, it was opened for use on the first inst. at 10 o'clock a. m., the hour named in the notice. Several persons soon came in and asked for books, and the proper business of the library was immediately entered upon. The first books called for were Woodhouse's Astronomy, Fœlix's Traité du Droit International, Frontinus' de Acquæductibus, Asiatic Researches. Abernethy on diseases of the stomach, Cruveilhaer Anatomie Pathologique, Moore's Poems, Muller's Science of War, Goldsmith's Works, Cuvier's Animal Kingdom, Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, Chambers' English Literature, etc. This specification is formed by taking every fifth work on the list of those asked for during the day, and is a fair sample of the class and character of the first day's reading. The whole number of readers was about fifty, the total number of books called for between sixty and seventy, of which all except some three or four were found to belong to the library. On the second day the number of readers and of books used was much larger, and both continued to increase until the end of the week, without any material difference in the kind of reading. Costly works of Art and of Natural History were often asked for, and shown by one of the assistants in the Library. Many works of this description belong to it which are too large for common exhibition, but whenever it is important to a reader to examine them, permission is given for their use, under the direction of someone accustomed to manage them.

"We understand from the Superintendent that nothing could be more satisfactory than the deportment, both of readers and visitors, during the first week's experiment in the use of the Library; it was unexceptionable in every respect, and affords an unequivocal proof that its advantages are understood and valued. It would be unjust to these gentlemen to suppose that any other influence was necessary to produce this result than their own sense of propriety. They felt they were in the presence of representatives of the mighty dead; and they showed that they knew what respect is due to them. Many no doubt were disappointed and somewhat annoyed at not finding printed catalogues of the Library to assist them in making choice of books for reading, and at not being freely admitted within the railing to take down books for examination themselves. The latter would be wholly incompatible with the order which must be preserved in keeping books in their places; the former defects, we are informed, will be remedied as soon as it is possible to prepare and print such a catalogue as will essentially aid those using the library. This cannot be done well if it is done hastily, and the present substitutes will serve the purpose for some time.

"The experiment thus far is so satisfactory to the direction of the library, that it excites the strongest wish to give every possible facility in the use of it consistent with its safe administration. Its machinery, it must be remembered, is now working only on its trial trip, and should it be discovered that any of the screws are loose, it will not require much time to replace them. The inquiry is often made, 'Will the library be open in the evening?' Those who reflect upon the difficulties in the way of accomplishing this will soon decide that it cannot be. The labor and expense of administering it would be more than doubled, so say nothing of the greatly increased risk of fire from a number of gas burners sufficient to light the large saloon. The number of persons to whom this would be an accommodation is too small to justify the diversion of so large a sum as it would cost from the better use of it in adding to the books. There are two classes of persons for whose benefit it is particularly desirable to have the library accessible in the evening, if they would be disposed to use it; we refer to apprentices and clerks. If any plan can be devised by which this can be done, without the cost and risk of lighting the principal library room, we have not a doubt that the trustees would adopt it."

Of these first days Cogswell wrote to Ticknor on February 24, 1854: "Everything goes on very smoothly among the habitués of the library. The readers average from one to two hundred daily, and they read excellent books, except the young fry, who employ all the hours they are out of school in reading the trashy, as Scott, Cooper, Dickens, Punch, and the 'Illustrated News.' Even this is better than spinning street yarns, and as long as they continue perfectly orderly and quiet, as they now are, I shall not object to their amusing themselves with poor books." He prepared a semi-official account of the Library for the "Home Journal," which was reprinted in large part by the newspapers of the day and also in the fifth annual report of the trustees.

"The Astor Library is placed in a central and easily accessible situation. Lafayette Place, on the east side of which it is built, communicates with the two great thoroughfares of the city — Broadway and the Bowery; by Great Jones Street at the south, Astor Place and Eighth Street at the north, and by Fourth Street near the centre. A more appropriate site could not be found in New-York. The street has a refined, classic air, and is in a good degree exempt from the throng and noise and bustle of business streets. The contrast between it and Broadway is so striking in this respect, that it is difficult to comprehend that they are in such near proximity.

“The library edifice is a plain structure of brick, raised upon a lower story of rustic ashler brown stone, somewhat more lofty than the neighboring buildings. The style of architecture is the Byzantine, and the front is rendered imposing by the deeply recessed arched doors and windows, the rich brown stone mouldings and mullions, and still more by the boldly projecting cornice, corbels, and entablature, all beautifully wrought in the same material. On opening the main entrance door, the eye falls at once upon a beautiful flight of thirty-six broad marble steps, leading between straight walls of solid mason work, to the second floor of the building, which is the main floor of the library proper. These stairs land the visitor at a point about the centre of the room, which is a hundred feet in length by sixty-four in width and fifty in height. A broad skylight, extending two-thirds its length, with a row of huge curved panes of glass on each side, and a double sash spreading nearly horizontally across the centre, pours in a flood of light from above, which, with that let in through the broad windows in front and eight in the rear, gives an uncommonly cheerful aspect to the apartment. It is really beautiful as it is, and will be much more so when the glare of its stucco ornaments, and of its gilded balustrades, become[s] softened down by time: The internal arrangement is a very convenient one, and very economical of space. A series of seven alcoves or apartments, open in front and rear, fills up the space on each side from the side walls to the columns which support the roof, leaving corridors two and a half feet in width along the walls, by which a communication is established between the different parts of the library. On this plan, the capacity of the room for books is more than doubled; that is, for every fifty-one wall shelves, there are seventy-two in the alcoves. On no other could it be made to contain one hundred thousand volumes, as it is now ascertained it will. Each alcove has a light gallery, eleven feet above the floor, to give easy access to the higher tier of shelves; and these galleries, extended in front of the wall shelves, form a continued corridor from end to end. The room within the columns which support the roof is open from floor to skylight, but divided into two stories between these columns and the outer walls. In the second story there is a series of alcoves exactly corresponding to that on the first, with similar galleries above. The part of the library which is divided into alcoves is separated from the open area in the centre by a light iron railing. This area is provided with reading tables, for those who wish to use the books, which are to be handed to them by the assistant librarians. The only part of the library above the first floor which has not been described are two small rooms in the northeast corner, appropriated to the superintendent: these two rooms are not taken from the main building, but formed by carrying up a portion of the walls of the projection in the rear.

"A little more than four years have now elapsed since the library edifice was begun, and it is not yet six months since it was completed. In this last interim, the books, now amounting to nearly eighty thousand volumes, have been classified, catalogued, and systematically arranged upon the shelves; and in the same time a great deal of other labor incident to the preparation of a library has been done. This may seem a long time for accomplishing such a work, to those who have been waiting to use the books; but it would be difficult to name a library of equal extent, that was ever put in order in less.

"The number of volumes is now nearly eighty thousand: it is proper to add, that some thousands of these are double and triple volumes, bound together for the sake of economy. Had these remained as they were bought, the whole number would be considerably greater than it is.

"The system of classification is that of Brunet, whose great work on Bibliography, entitled 'Manuel du Libraire,' is better, more complete, and more generally known than any similar publication. His system is by no means unexceptionable, but some chart is indispensable in arranging a library, and that is the best that has been given to the public.

"The arrangement begins with Theology. In this department the Astor Library has three thousand, seven hundred and fifty-two volumes, including the best editions of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures, the Walton Polyglott, various editions of the Vulgate, and numerous versions of the whole Bible, and of parts of it, in the principal languages of Europe and the East. The collection of the Fathers is full, but not absolutely complete, and contains most of the Benedictine editions, the Bibliotheca Maxima of Despont, the Patres Apostolici of Cotelierius, and many other works of this class of less note. It is equally well provided with works on the Councils, including Colet's edition of Labbé, in twenty-nine volumes; the Concilia Maxima, in thirty-seven volumes folio; Beveridge's Synodicon, Lorenzana, Concilianos provinciales, etc. It is also respectable in scholastic, dogmatic, parenetic and polemic theology, including the early and more recent English divines in the best editions.

"Jurisprudence forms the second department, which numbers three thousand one hundred and seven volumes. In this, the object has been to provide those works which are rarely found here, rather than to form a complete law library. The collection is good on the civil law, embracing various editions of the Corpus Juris, and commentaries upon it; it contains also, all the codes of Scandinavia, and of other parts of Europe, during the middle ages; the system of jurisprudence as now practised in Italy, Portugal, Germany, Denmark and Sweden; the Fierosa siete Partidas and Recopilaciones of Spain, together with the digests and commentaries on the Musselman, Hindoo, Gentoo and Chinese laws. In French law, the library is really rich, beginning with the Ordonances des Reis, and coming down to the very latest volume of the Journal du Palais. The selection for the English common law was made by two of the most eminent jurists in the country: it is not large, but very choice. In this department, the most prominent deficiency is in American law; and for that a whole alcove has been reserved, to be filled up as soon as practicable.

"The next department is that of Sciences and Arts, in which, of course, medical science is included; and as it occupies an alcove adjoining jurisprudence, this is the proper place to introduce it.

"The number of volumes in the medical department of the library is only 1,751. This, as a specialty, is so well provided for in the hospital and other medical libraries of the city, it was thought less important to make a full collection of medical books here. It is also a specialty in which there are many books not suited to a general public library; but full justice will be done for the department when it is known what should be done. Medical gentlemen have only to say what books are wanting, to be sure of their being provided.

"The Natural Sciences form another division of this department, and this is one of the richest and best furnished in the library. It is necessarily very costly, as naturalists will readily understand, when they know it contains such works as the 'Palmarum Genera et Species of Martius,' in a colored copy; 'Plantæ Asiaticæ Rariores of Wallich'; Roxburgh's 'Plants of the Coast of Coromandel'; a complete set of Gould's Birds of Europe, Australia, Himalayas, Toucans, and Trogons; 'Illustrations Conchyliologiques par Chenu'; 'Audubon's Birds of America'; 'Sibthorp's Flora Græca'; 'Lambert's Genus Pinus'; and at least a hundred other volumes of the same character. The whole number of volumes embraced in it is four thousand two hundred and forty-nine.

"The third division of sciences and arts is that of Chemistry and Physics; to which, from the intimate relation it bears to them, may be added that of Useful Arts or Polytechnics. The transactions of societies for the promotion of science and arts may also be assigned to it. These collections contain so many memoirs and papers of prime importance to practical men, as well as to men of science, which are published in no other form, and it was deemed necessary to have them as complete as possible in the library. The desideratum is now nearly attained. We have the publications of the principal societies in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Russia, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, and also of the United States, amounting altogether to more than two thousand volumes, principally quartos. It will be a leading object of the library to provide a complete 'Bibliothèque Industrielle,' or collection of books for the special benefit of practical industry. A convenient and commodious room will be prepared for it on the first floor of the building, in which every accommodation will be afforded to those who wish to consult it. It was not possible to make this arrangement in time for the opening of the library; but it will soon be done. The books which appertain to it now amount to nearly five thousand volumes.

"In the order of classification, the Metaphysical and Ethical Sciences precede the Natural; but it was found necessary, in the arrangement of the library, to make a deviation, and place the last named first. The class now referred to includes general philosophical treatises, works on intellectual and moral philosophy, and the application of the latter to education, politics, and political economy. The books on these subjects now belonging to the library amount to fifteen hundred volumes: the addition of about an equal number would complete the department.

“Next in order are the Mathematical Sciences, of which the Astor Library has a first rate collection. It is rich, not only in pure mathematics, but also in the applied: in astronomy, mechanics, hydraulics, engineering it is very full, and not deficient in military tactics. It has drawn largely upon the libraries of several celebrated mathematicians for books to form it, such as Halley’s and Legendre’s, which were greatly enriched by Mr. S. Ward, after they were bought by him; also Jacobi’s and the two Heiligenstadts, of Berlin. To these have since been added the most important mathematical works more recently published in Europe and America. A very competent judge, who is a resident in Berlin, considers the collection as more complete than that of the Royal Library there; and although this opinion may not be altogether correct, it is undoubtedly entitled to be ranked with the first mathematical libraries abroad. The number of volumes contained in it may be put down at five thousand. Besides full collections of all the published works of Euler and Gauss, it has several unpublished manuscripts of these great mathematicians; all the mathematical journals; all the works of Newton, Leibnitz, the Bernouillis, Laplace, Delambre, Lacroix, Legendre, Jacobi, Adel, etc.; the astronomical observations generally, and a very large number of mathematical dissertations and papers, which are not easily found.

“Following upon this division is that of the Arts; and as an account of the books on polytechnics has already been given in connection with chemistry, those on the fine arts only remain to be described. No part of a library requires so much money as this, as it consists mostly of books of plates and engravings, which are generally large and expensive folios. Still, it is too important to be curtailed, and the collection in the Astor Library will be found not to have been so treated. In the four branches of the Fine Arts proper, and including Archæology, which cannot be separated from ancient art, there are in the collection about twenty-five hundred volumes, upon the first fifty of which two thousand nine hundred and seventy-five dollars were expended. To verify this statement we name the fifty volumes, premising that they are all large folios, fully bound in red morocco, in the most finished style, except six, which are half bound. A complete set of Piranesi’s ‘Antiquities,’ proof plates, twenty-eight in twenty-one volumes; ‘Musée Français et Royale,’ proof plates before the letter, six volumes; Raphael’s ‘Loggia of the Vatican,’ engraved by Volpato, and exquisitely colored by hand in the exact style of the originals, three volumes; a complete set of the ‘Grecian Antiquities,’ thirteen volumes; Gruner’s ‘Fresco Decorations of Italy,’ colored by hand in the same style as Raphael's 'Loggia,' one volume, and Lepsius's 'Denkmäler aus Ægypten,' six volumes.

"Our next general division is Literature or Belles Lettres, beginning with languages. In books on languages the library is strong, perhaps we might say very strong: its linguistic apparatus would do credit to a much older institution. It has grammars and dictionaries of one hundred and four different languages, and numerous vocabularies of the rude unwritten ones. It has also chrestomathies, and other usual facilities for studying them. All the families and branches of European languages, and a greater part of those of Asia and Africa, are represented in the collection. It contains the best works on the Egyptian hieroglyphics, the cuneiform inscriptions, and the other curious records of the ancient nations of the East, which recent discoveries have brought to light. It has also the best of the vocabularies of the ancient dialects of the Mexican and South American Indians, which were collected and published by the early Spanish missionary priests. Books of this last class have become excessively rare, and consequently dear. A perfect copy of Molina's 'Arte de la Lengua Mexicana,' cannot be had for less than fifty dollars; and Rincon's Grammar of the same language, a mean little duodecimo, bound, or rather done up in limp vellum, which few would accept as a gift, costs much more than its weight in gold. This sort of books makes large drafts upon the funds of a library, without adding much either to its volumes or its appearances; but they must be had. In the Oriental collection there are two works, which must be so rare in this country, that it may be important to describe them; and these are the 'Seven Seas: a Dictionary and Grammar of the Persian Language,' in seven volumes, folio, by the late king of Oudh, which was printed in his palace; and the 'Sabda Kalpa Druma of the Rajah Radhakant Deb,' a Sanskrit dictionary, in seven volumes, folio — the last two not yet received. Neither of these works was printed for sale: several copies of the first were sent as presents to the East India Company in London, one of which we have; and the second was intended only for presents to the native and English pundits. Our copy was one which was presented to the Rev. W. Morton, author of a Bengali and English dictionary, at whose death it was sold. The whole linguistic collection numbers two thousand and one hundred volumes.

"In the other divisions of literature, the classification is made first according to language, and then in each language the subdivisions are more or less minute in proportion as the works are numerous. The history of each literature is found with it; and first of Greek and Latin literature. This is neither a very strong nor a weak department of the library; it is just about as it ought to be, to stand neither above nor below its fair proportion. It contains a copy of one or more editions of all the authors of note in both languages. When it has one edition only, the most approved has uniformly been selected. Of the authors of the highest rank, several editions in all cases have been provided. There are, for instance, more than a dozen different Homers — among them the princeps of 1488; half as many of the Greek tragedians, of

Pindar, of Demosthenes, of Herodotus, of Thucydides, and all of that class. So in Latin there are twelve Virgils, quite as many Horaces, half as many Ovids and Ciceros, and Livys, and Plinys. The whole number of volumes, in both languages, with the apparatus criticus pertaining to them, is three thousand one hundred. In Spanish and Portuguese literature, the number of volumes is six hundred and seventy-three; the Italian, though not fuller in proportion, has one thousand seven hundred and sixty-one. In coming to the French, we find a still more copious literature; in this the library has three thousand one hundred and one volumes. German literature is of a more recent growth than either of those previously named; of the fourteen hundred volumes in this language of the class of belles lettres, certainly one thousand must be the productions of the present century, and not above one hundred anterior to the middle of the last. In Dutch literature we have brought together one hundred and fifty-six volumes, including the immortal Cats, in various forms and sizes; Vondel, Feith, the publications of the Bataafsche Maatschappij, the Maatschappij der Nederlandsche Letterkunde te Leiden, the Hollandsche Maatschappij van Fraaije Kunsten en Wetenschappen, and of the Vereeniging ter Bevordering der Oude Nederlandsche Letterkunde.

"The collection of Scandinavian literature, distinct from the Sagas and other historical works, amounts to eight hundred and nine volumes. In the Hungarian, and in the Slavonic languages collectively, we have only forty-one.

"It may be feared, perhaps, that in this confusion of languages, the mother tongue has been forgotten; but that is not the case, we have come at last to the pure well of English undefiled. In the collection of English literature, very few of the works of much value will be found wanting. It is not as large as it might easily be made; but it has its full proportion, and cannot rightly claim to be made absolutely complete at the expense of the others. It now numbers three thousand four hundred volumes, more than three hundred of which are exclusively Shaksperian literature. It should be borne in mind that a large portion of every department in the library, except that of literature, consists of books in the English language; so that it is fair to conclude that more than one-half of the whole could be read by those who knew no other. To this it may be added, that in collecting books for a library which aims to be a good and a great one, the proper question is, what is the merit of a work, and not in what language it is written.

"The Historical department is the last in the order of classification. This department is fuller perhaps than any other, with the exception of mathematics, languages and bibliography. It constitutes a fourth part at least of the whole library. With a few exceptions it is arranged in the series of alcoves extending on the main floor, from the southeast to the southwest corner. Works on chronology, diplomatics, numismatics, heraldry, inscriptions and antiquities, are regarded as introductions to the right understanding of history, and are placed in the first alcove, with general biographical dictionaries and universal history. Biography does not form a class by itself; but is placed either with the civil or literary history to which it belongs.

Geography, for the more convenient use of maps and charts, is placed on the second floor; and voyages and travels, as most intimately connected with the discovery and history of America, are placed in immediate proximity to it, instead of preceding the historical collection, as they usually do.

"Ecclesiastical History is appended to Theology. This account has already been too far extended to allow the details to be continued. It can only be stated generally, that the historical divisions are in the usual way, and that when it was necessary to bring the history of more than one country into the same alcove, regard was had to the connection which had existed between them in the past. Thus Spanish, Portuguese and Italian History are together; French occupies a whole alcove; German, Dutch and Belgian are together in an alcove, and with them Scandinavian and Russian; English, Scotch and Irish History fills another alcove. Asiatic and African History, for want of room below, is placed on the second floor, in an alcove with Oriental literature; the latter, including the Chinese, number seven hundred volumes.

"To the American Historical department, a larger space in the library has been assigned than to any other, because it is intended to make this the most complete. The collection already formed contains most of the early Spanish writers; the early voyages, the accounts of the first colonists, the various histories of the War of Independence, and the older books generally. In the more modern ones, there are many deficiencies to be supplied. Not in American History only, but also in American Literature, it is hoped that the library will, sooner or later, be made complete. It now numbers three thousand four hundred and seven volumes, making in all the divisions of history, twenty thousand three hundred and fifty volumes.

"At the end of his system of classification, Brunet has a sort of appendix, which he calls Paralipomenes Historiques, where he places Bibliography and Literary History. It would certainly be quite as philosophical an arrangement to regard books of this class as introductions, for they are indispensable to the knowledge of all others. For this reason, and for the convenience of those who have charge of the library, they have this place assigned to them in our arrangement. The collection is very full in both of these classes, particularly in the former, in which scarcely one important work is wanting. The number of volumes contained in them is four thousand six hundred, which is exclusive of the special literary history of the different countries."

The interest of the extract itself and its value as an exposition of ends and aims must justify adding to the above lengthy quotation from Cogswell's pen, the following extract from his report to the trustees, dated January 25, 1854, and printed in their fifth annual report to the legislature:

"I trust I shall not be understood as implying that the real worth of a library is to be estimated by its number of volumes, which is very like estimating a farm by its number of acres. Use and time are the only certain tests of the value of a library.

“There are but few general libraries in this country which have been formed upon system, and here, in this great city especially, one was needed, to supply before existing deficiencies: one that would enable the scientific enquirer to track the progress of knowledge and discovery to its last step; to furnish to the mechanic arts and practical industry in general, the help and guidance required from books; to make the artist familiar with the history, character and style of the great masters of his art; to call up to the student the past, in all the wide range of imagination and thought, and provide the best and healthiest intellectual food for the minds of all ages and classes.

“If this is the character of the Astor library, it is such an one as the founder intended to establish. Not a book was bought for it, during his lifetime, that was not of this description, and every one that was bought had his sanction. The number was not great, but sufficient to show what sort of a library he intended to create. Can any one suppose, that such books as Audubon’s Birds of America, Montfaucon’s Antiquities, Dumont’s Cours de Droit, the Writings of the Fathers, Britton’s Architectural Antiquities, the first, second and third editions of Erasmus’ Greek Testament, the Principes Pausanias, the Transactions of the Society of Arts, and the Parliamentary Journals, were to make part of a popular library?

“But all these, and others of the same stamp, were bought under Mr. Astor’s direction and approval. It is certain, both from what he said and what he did, that he had in view the lasting welfare and progressive improvement, and not the mere momentary gratification of the community, in founding the library which bears his name. Had it been nothing more than a reading-room, or a circulating library, which he intended, he would never have wasted such munificence upon it: a tithe of the sum would have more than sufficed.

“Besides, all such libraries are the proper concerns of clubs and societies formed for that express purpose, and to be managed as they see fit.

“It is important that the character of this institution should be fixed at the beginning. Every measure in connexion with it has been taken on the ground of its being a library for reference and consultation, and not a lending one or a miscalled popular one. It is equally free to the poorest and to the wealthiest, for the use to which it is adapted.

“By our excellent system of free schools and free academies, instruction in its widest scope is enjoyed by every child in the land; and whence can the knowledge necessary for imparting that instruction be drawn, if there are no fountain-heads, at which the teachers can drink? But for the Croton dam and the reservoirs supplied by means of it, how many thousands in this great metropolis would now be thirsty for a draught of water? In the same way, great reservoirs of science and learning are indispensable for feeding the streams, which diffuse the blessings of knowledge through every dwelling, as well the humblest as the proudest.

“When a library is known to have rare and valuable books, which cannot elsewhere be found, all who are in want of such books will resort to it, so long as it is a certainty not only that the books wanted belong to the library, but also that they are not lent out.

“Until libraries of this character are more numerous in this country, the only way of making them most extensively serviceable is to keep the books where they are sure to be found, and can be consulted readily. No large library, filled with the popular reading books of the day, could sustain itself fifty years, unless its means were unlimited. All the works of that class would require to be renewed every four or five years, and inevitable bankruptcy would be the end of the institution.

“It must be the wish, as it is the duty, of the trustees of the Astor Library, to make it as widely and as generally useful as possible, and they only are the constituted judges of the proper mode of effecting it. A free public library is a new thing here, and some practical experience is required before a final plan of operations can be fixed upon. Experiment and observation will doubtless develop improvements which may be necessary.

“It is not unreasonable to ask for that confidence and co-operation on the part of the public, which will enable the trustees to complete the organization of the institution, and place it on a basis of permanent usefulness, combined with the readiest accommodation to all who wish to avail themselves of its privileges. To meet what was understood to be a general wish, it was opened prematurely; and without much patient indulgence of those who resort to it, the work which remains for providing all necessary facilities cannot be perfected.

“In forming this library, it has not been forgotten that it is designed for a general and not a special one: hence it is not to be expected that it will be found complete in any one department; at the same time, I may assert that not one will prove absolutely meagre.

“The next step is to ascertain what deficiencies are first to be made up, and what facilities are now afforded for doing this, by the present classification and arrangement. An hour or two's examination of a department, by a person conversant with its literature, would disclose to him what is still most requisite in it, and in this way the whole library might soon be brought to an uniform condition of completeness.

“There would still be much that could not be done, without greater means than the library has at command. As its importance and usefulness become more and more manifest, the desire for its increase will become more general; the studies and tastes of different individuals will lead them to take special interest in one or other of the departments, and provide for its completion. Something in this way was done for the department of bibliography, when the library began to be formed. The privilege is now claimed by Mr. William B. Astor, of taking another under his special protection. When I was in Europe the last time, he opened for me a credit of two thousand five hundred pounds for the purchase of books, to form a special technological library, embracing every branch of practical industry and the mechanic arts. Between seven and eight thousand dollars of this sum were expended in books of that class, which, together with those of the same kind before bought, form an extensive collection in this department.

“As this is a department which requires a good deal of room for its convenient use, I would suggest to the trustees that the large room on the first floor, known as the lecture room, should be appropriated to it, and shelving put up for arranging it. This plan would gain, in the principal library saloon, a large space for the additions which must soon come into it.

“During the last two years the Bibliographical department has been much increased, and including general literary history, which is annexed to it, now forms a library not much short of five thousand volumes. This having been collected at my own charge, I cannot be called upon to render an account of its cost, which is to me the most agreeable circumstance in connection with it. I would as soon tell a child, if I had one, how much I had expended upon his education, as allow a thought of money to have any part in my interest in the Astor Library.

“As respects catalogues, the present state of things is as follows: The perpetual catalogue, which is so planned as never to require any other change than that of being enlarged with the increase of the library, is now completed, and as soon as it can be revised and compared with the titles in the books, may be transcribed for printing. It is made on separate slips, and kept in boxes of the form and appearance of books. Such a catalogue is, of course, only fit for the use of the officers of the library. I propose, if it meets the approbation of the trustees, to take up the library by departments and prepare a classed catalogue, to be printed as each department is completed: in the mean while, the printed index, and the two additional catalogues in manuscript will answer for immediate use.”

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

American Railway Master Mechanics' Association. Locomotive dictionary, definitions and illustrations of American locomotives, their parts and equipment... Compiled and edited for the American Railway Masters Association by Roy V. Wright... assisted by George Mitchell... New York: Simmons-Boardman Pub. Co. [1916.] 2 p.l., 991 p., 1 diagr. 4. ed. 4°.

† TPE

Fourth edition of this remarkable work of nearly one thousand pages. Contains half-tone reproductions and dimensioned drawings not only of the locomotives themselves but of the various accessories and repair apparatus. The different parts are described in glossary form. Has an excellent section on the electric locomotive.

"To cover the remarkable advance that has taken place in the last three years it has been necessary to thoroughly revise the old Dictionary, and this, the 1916 edition, not only brings up to date and shows the most recent developments in locomotive construction, but also contains entirely new sections devoted to pulverized fuel, gasolene locomotives, systems of combustion and many details and appurtenances until recently practically unknown. The sections covering superheaters, mechanical stokers, valve gears, fireboxes, brick arches, coal pushers and oil-burning locomotives have been greatly enlarged and contain new material which represents the best practice." — From the preface.

Gill, Napier John. The flyer's guide, an elementary handbook for aviators. London: H. Rees, Ltd., 1916. vii, 102 p. illus. 8°.

VDY

Believing that an air pilot should understand not only the principles of flight but also the construction and care of aeroplanes and their engines, the author has included such material in his instructions to the beginner. His chapter on "Practical flying" is devoted to the military aspect of aviation. A good working knowledge of flying may be gained from this clear, well-diagrammed summary of the science of aeronautics.

Harmuth, Louis. Dictionary of textiles. New York: Fairchild Pub. Co., 1915. 4 p.l., 174 p. 4°.

VL

An alphabetical list of over 6,000 definitions relating to textile fibres and fabrics. Contains names of many fabrics now obsolete, with descriptions intended as a help to manufacturers seeking new effects. The names of important chemicals, with a short mention of their uses in textile manufacturing and finishing, are also included. French, German and English textiles, as well as those of the South and Central American markets, receive special attention.

Hayward, Charles Brian. Automobile ignition, starting, and lighting; a comprehensive analysis of the complete electrical equipment of the modern automobile, including many wiring diagrams and details of all the important starting-lighting systems. Chicago: American Technical Society, 1916. 4 p.l., 381, 7 p. illus. 8°. TON

"The author, who for years has been very closely associated with automobile and electrical affairs, has tried to present his material to meet the needs of the general reader and at the same time reach the difficulties of the repair man. For the latter classification the wiring diagrams have been carefully analyzed, and full instructions have been given for the various types. The discussion of the earlier as well as the latest models of each particular system and the variations of the same system on different cars should be helpful." — From the preface.

Hodgson, James T. Modern boiler room practice and smoke abatement. London: The Railway Engineer [1915]. 1 p.l., (i) viii-xv, 321 p. illus. 8°. (The railway series of text books and manuals... no. 9.)

VFH

A profusely illustrated and up-to-date work describing in simple language the various means and accessories for obtaining maximum power at a minimum cost. Has chapters on coal and combustion, firing methods, boiler construction, water supply and purification, saturated steam, piping, coal testing, and instruction for attendants. Chapters 19 and 20 give practical questions and answers.

Martin, Geoffrey, and J. L. FOUCAR. Sulphuric acid & sulphur products. London: C. Lockwood and Son, 1916. viii p., 1 l., 3-80 p., 1 diagr. illus. tables. 8°. (Manuals of chemical technology [no. 5].)

The fifth of this excellent series brings together the most important technical data on sulphur, sulphuric acid, sulphur dioxide and sulphites, carbon disulphide, sodium thiosulphate, sodium hypsulphite, and sulphuretted hydrogen. Well supplied with references.

Martin, Geoffrey, and others. The salt & alkali industry, including potassium salts and the Stassfurt industry, by Geoffrey Martin... Stanley Smith... and F. Milsom... New York: D. Appleton and Co., 1916. viii, 100 p. illus. tables. 4°. (Manuals of chemical technology. [no. 6].)

Presents in concise form statistical, historical, and technical information about the important industries of salt, hydrochloric acid, sodium sulphate, sodium carbonate, caustic soda, and the potassium salts. Well provided with bibliographical references.

"The chapters on the Stassfurt industry and on potassium salts are from the pen of Mr. F. Milsom, B.Sc., of London... These sections have especial interest at the present time owing to the fundamental need of potassium salts in the agricultural industries, and the shortage of supplies all over the world owing to the stoppage of the German supplies from Stassfurt." — Preface.

Moxey, Louis W. The electrical contractor; principles of cost-keeping and estimating, wiring and illumination calculations and other technical problems of the business. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. vii, 86 p. illus. tables. 8°. VGF

A practical system based, it is stated, on twenty years' business and technical experience, much of the material having appeared in the Electrical world. Contains instructions for calculating wire sizes for alternating and direct circuits, also useful tables and blank forms.

Roe, Joseph Wickham. English and American tool builders. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1916. xv p., 1 l., 315 p., 15 pl., 19 ports. illus. 8°. VFV

"Prof. Roe's book satisfies the desire of every normal American man for information about tools and mechanical devices. It has solid historical value, and scores the difficult achievement of technical accuracy without using a special language, while the tracing of industrial history and sketching of the lives of the men who made our manufactures possible are done in what may be called, without the unflattering connotation that has been fastened upon the word, the best qualities of 'popular' treatment." — From a review in The Sun, New York, June 11, 1916.

Tucker, James Irwin. The American road; a non-engineering manual for practical road builders. Treating the construction, administration, and economics of improved earth roads. Norman, Okla., 1916. x p., 1 l., 235 p., 15 pl. illus. 12°. VDG

This concise, simply-written, and well illustrated handbook by the professor of civil engineering in the University of Oklahoma, treats of road economics and engineering and is designed to meet the requirements of actual road-builders, civil engineers, and interested laymen. There are chapters on cost accounting and convict labor.

Wakefield, Sam. Cotton doubling and twisting. Manchester: Marsden & Co., Ltd., 1916. 2 parts in 1 v. illus. 8°. VLD

This work is to be issued in eight sections of which the present volume comprises the first two: (1) Yarn testing and sampling, (2) Doubler winding. Discusses theory and practice, including old and new methods "in order that the student may clearly perceive the general trend of their evolution." Well illustrated. Most of the material appeared originally in The Textile mercury.

ECONOMICS, SOCIOLOGY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

Alexander, De Alva Stanwood. History and procedure of the House of Representatives. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1916. xv p., 2 l., (1)4-435(1) p. 8°. SEFB

A popular historical account of the organization and procedure of the House of Representatives. The author has been a member of the house and his book is based upon lectures delivered at various times to his constituents. Sketches of famous congressmen give an additional interest to the book throughout.

Appendices contain lists of speakers, chairmen of committees and other officers.

Berne, Pierre. L'immigration européenne en Argentine. Paris: M. Rivière & Cie., 1915. 242 p. 8°. SEV

A brief historical review of immigration to the Argentine, together with a discussion of the immigration from each of the larger European countries.

Bourne, Randolph Silliman. The Gary schools. With an introduction by William Wirt... Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co. [1916.] xix, 204 p., 8 pl. 12°. STB

A description of the organization and curriculum of the schools of Gary as they have been developed by Mr. William Wirt. The book dispels several misconceptions about the Gary system; for instance, that the Steel Corporation has financed the schools, and that the system is suited only to local conditions. Mr. Bourne regards it as the most satisfactory and economical system yet devised, adaptable to any community, and particularly to one having overcrowded schools.

Clapp, Edwin Jones. The port of Boston; a study and a solution of the traffic and operating problems of Boston, and its place in the competition of the North Atlantic seaports. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1916. xii, 402 p., 2 plans, 2 pl. illus. tables. 8°. TR

An expansion of a report made to the directors of the port of Boston on the traffic situation in Boston. "It will be found that more than the traffic problem is here covered. The book deals also with a number of difficulties of operation; that is, the arrangement for interchange of traffic between land and water carriers... Much attention is given throughout to the theory of port charges and operations, and the practices of other Atlantic ports are generally cited with regard to such matters as belt lines, lighterage, elevator charges and port industries."

Doolittle, F. W. Studies in the cost of urban transportation service. New York: American Electric Railway Association, 1916. xii, 467, xiii-xxiii p. illus. 8°. TPY

A thorough analysis of the elements which enter into the cost of building and operating street railways. The Cleveland and Milwaukee systems occupy a large part of the book.

Floy, Henry. Value for rate-making. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1916. viii, 322 p., 1 chart. 1. ed. 8°. TNH

The purpose of this book, like that of a former volume by the same author, The valuation of public utility properties, is to help standardize the practice of valuation procedure. Three principles are particularly emphasized as essential in fixing rates.

"First. To conform to the rulings of the courts the basis for rate-making should be the fair present value of the property used, regardless of the amount of the original investment in utilities established previous to the present public regulation regime.

"Second. Present value for rate-making is obtained by making deduction for absolute depreciation only; ignoring theoretical depreciation. Absolute depreciation being that deterioration which is in evidence, existing and determined by inspection. Theoretical depreciation being estimates only, based on assumptions and computations.

"Third. Practically every utility property includes certain intangible non-physical elements, which should be evaluated and allowed in addition to the material, sensible elements. The value of the non-physical parts may vary from a few per cent. to a hundred per cent. or more of the value of the physical parts of a property."

Gowin, Enoch Burton, and W. A. WHEATLEY. Occupations; a textbook in vocational guidance. Boston: Ginn and Co. [cop. 1916.] xii, 357 p. illus. 12°. SSM

A text-book outlining the requirements for success in various trades and professions. Questions and bibliographies are given at the ends of chapters.

Guenther, Louis. Investment and speculation. Chicago: La Salle Extension University, 1916. xi, 289 p. 8°. TG

An elementary text-book intended to give a general idea of the stock and bond business. Beginning with a description of various classes of bonds and stocks, it explains the methods of trading in securities, stock exchange operations, speculation, panics, the function of promoters, and the so-called "business barometers."

Mote, Carl H. Industrial arbitration; a world-wide survey of natural and political agencies for social justice and industrial peace. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Co. [1916.] 7 p.l., 351, xlv p. 12°. TDG

"Originally undertaken with an object of finding some tangible device for the prevention of strikes and lockouts, if any such device existed, this work in its present form aims to present a consideration of those devices now extant. It aims to present certain pertinent facts showing how the various devices or political agencies have worked or have failed to work. The study is meant to be an impartial discussion of industrial conciliation and arbitration and of social and industrial conditions, which, in the author's opinion, have a direct bearing on the results of legislative methods."—Preface.

Reviews conditions in England, Germany, France, Australia, New Zealand and the United States.

Payne, George Henry. The child in human progress. With a foreword by A. Jacobi... New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1916. xix, 400 p., 1 fac., 30 pl., 1 port. 8°. SO

A history of the treatment of children throughout the world from the earliest times to the present day. It traces the humanitarian movement to its final stage in which child welfare is regarded as one of the most important branches of social work.

Rousseau, Jean Jacques. The political writings of Jean Jacques Rousseau, edited from the original manuscripts and authentic editions, with introductions and notes by C. E. Vaughan... Cambridge: University Press, 1915. 2 v. fac. 8°. SB Rousseau's writings have frequently been amended by editors, either because they did not understand his meaning or because they thought they could improve upon his French. This edition aims to give all his political writings, including some hitherto unpublished, in Rousseau's own words. With each work there is an introduction of considerable length.

Sonne, H. C. The city, its finance, July, 1914 to July, 1915, and future. London: E. Wilson, 1915. x, 208 p. 12°. TIF

Narrates the financial measures adopted in England to prevent a panic at the beginning of the war. The text of special financial acts of Parliament occupies a large part of the book.

ART

Work in Gold and Silver

The Library's collection of books on the goldsmith's and silversmith's art is constantly growing. There is here a storehouse of material picturing the noteworthy achievements of other days. On this, designers can profitably draw for suggestions and ideas. It is to be hoped that the lessons of the past may not be entirely overlooked in the rush for the

"up-to-date," in which it seems not impossible perhaps, to run to ungoverned looseness instead of orderly design.

Interior Decoration and Furniture

We cannot expect to see an American style created off-hand. It will naturally be a case of gradual development, with all sorts of foreign influences having their say. It is quite natural that we should borrow from the designs of other lands and times. But such adaptation must be carried on with knowledge and understanding and taste. It must not be a matter of easy and indiscriminate "lifting."

To those who are working towards the best training of designers, the collection of books on decoration in the Library should be a useful and valuable help. The books are there to help toward a better understanding of the principles and history of design.

NEWS OF THE MONTH

GIFTS

DURING the month of June the Library received as gifts a total of 2,729 volumes, 4,713 pamphlets, 30 maps, and 98 prints. The following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of these gifts: from Mrs. Whitelaw Reid of New York the Library received seven manuscript volumes, the series of notes made by Daniel Parker Coke on the claims of the American Loyalists which he passed upon as a member of the Royal Commission of 1783; also "The Royal Commission on the Losses and Services of American Loyalists 1783 to 1785, being the notes of Mr. Daniel Parker Coke, M.P., one of the Commissioners during that period, edited by Hugh Edward Egerton, Oxford, printed for presentation to the members of the Roxburghe Club, 1915."

From Miss Elizabeth Gulland of London came nine mezzotints in colors engraved by her after paintings by Reynolds, Raeburn, Romney, and Lawrence; also cancelled copies of two of these prints. Mrs. Charles E. Whittemore of New York gave two portfolios containing 46 etchings by Charles E. Whittemore.

From Mrs. Thomas A. Janvier of New York the Library received a collection of books, pamphlets, etc., relating to the history, literature, and customs of Provence, many of which are in the Provençal language. This collection comprises 373 volumes, 175 pamphlets, 3 photographs, 2 prints, 17 letters, 17 maps, and a box of toy pottery. From Mr. Albert E. Henschel of New York, came a collection of songs, 353 in number; from Mr. Richard Newton, jr., of New York, a copy, bound in full crushed levant, of the privately printed "Poems in passing," by Grace Clarke Newton, New York, 1916; and from Mrs. Lorenzo Ullo of New York, a collection of Italian books on civil, marine, and international law, comprising 183 volumes and 33 pamphlets.

ADDITIONS AND USE OF THE LIBRARY DURING JUNE, 1916

DURING the month of June, 1916, there were received at the Library 25,827 volumes and 5,642 pamphlets. (These figures include the additions to both Reference and Circulation Departments.) The total number of readers in the Central Building was 61,805. They consulted 182,368 volumes. Visitors to the building numbered 186,904.

PART II

For the first year the average daily use was about 100 volumes, with a total for the year of about 30,000. "But this," Cogswell says, "is a matter in which numerical statistics do not afford much satisfaction; nothing short of a specification of the books read or consulted would show the importance which the library is to the public, as a source of information and knowledge, and as this cannot be given, a more general account must serve as a substitute. On observing the classes and kinds of books which have been called for, I have been particularly struck with the evidence thus afforded of the wide range which the American mind is now taking in thought and research; scholastic theology, transcendental metaphysics, abstruse mathematics, and oriental philology have found many more readers than Addison and Johnson, while on the other hand, I am happy to be able to say, that works of practical science and of knowledge for every-day use, have been in great demand. Very few have come to the library without some manifestly distinct aim; that is, it has been little used for mere desultory reading, but for the most part with a specific view. It would not be easy to say which department is most consulted, but there is naturally less dependence upon the library for books of theology, law and medicine than in the others, the three faculties being better provided for in the libraries of the institutions especially intended for them. Still, in each of these departments, the library has many works not elsewhere to be found. It is now no longer merely a matter of opinion; it is shown by experience that the collection is not too learned for the wants of the public. No one fact will better illustrate this position than the following: in the linguistic department it possesses dictionaries and grammars, and other means of instruction in more than one hundred languages and dialects, four-fifths of which have been called for during the first year of its operation. Our mathematical, mechanical and engineering departments are used by great numbers, and they are generally known to be so well furnished, that students from a distance have found it a sufficient object to induce them to spend several weeks in New York to have the use of them. The same remark applies to natural history, all branches of which are much studied here. In entomology we are said to have the best and fullest collection in the country to which naturalists have free access. Passing to the historical side of the library we come to a department in which a very general interest has been taken — far more general than could have been anticipated in our country — it is that of heraldry and genealogy. Among the early purchases for the library there were but few books of this class, as it was supposed but few would be wanted; a year or two's experience proved the contrary, and the collection has been greatly enlarged; it is now sufficiently ample to enable anyone to establish his armorial bearings, and trace his pedigree at least as far back as the downfall of the Western empire. From this rapid glance at the library, it has been seen that there are students and readers in all departments of it, and that no one greatly preponderates over the rest; still, I think it may be stated, that on the whole that of the fine arts, taken collectively, is the one which has been most extensively used; practical architects and other artists have had free access to it, many of whom have often had occasion to consult it."

The number of readers this first year varied from thirty for the lowest day to one hundred and fifty for the highest. The minimum age for admission was fixed at fourteen, but it was soon found that reading room accommodations were not sufficient for adult readers and "the crowds of school-boys who came in at certain hours of the day to read, more for amusement than improvement, and shun their classical lessons by the use of English translations." The trustees, on Cogswell's recommendation, raised the age limit to sixteen, when the library "assumed its proper character, and became a place of quiet study, where every one found ample accommodation."

Some criticism was to be expected because of the restriction of the use of books to the building, but the answer came that the library had been established as a reference collection with no intention of circulation, and that "the still stronger reason may be added that a free library of circulation is a practical impossibility in a city as populous as New York. In the first place, it could never supply one out of a hundred of the demands in the case of popular books; and in the next place, it would be dispersed to the four winds within five years." The city was not to have a free circulating library for the next quarter of a century, not until the New York Free Circulating Library was established to demonstrate, in a measure, that Cogswell's pessimistic forebodings were unfounded. His own friends in Boston at this same time were establishing a system for the free circulation of books, many of which could scarcely be described as popular books or works designed for amusement alone.

However, to prevent further agitation of making the library one for circulation of books, the trustees entered on their records a stipulation expressing their views, "in such a form as to furnish a pledge, not only to the public, but to every friend of learning, who may hereafter feel disposed to aid the library by donations or endowments." The record shows that at the meeting of July 29, 1857:

"Mr. Astor stated, that the donations by him made, and some intended to be hereafter made, were on the understanding, that it was the settled and unchangeable basis of administering the library, that its contents should remain in the library rooms, for use by readers there, and should not be lent out or allowed to be taken from the rooms; and he requested that the views of the board be freely and fully expressed. It was thereupon

"RESOLVED, That the settled and unchangeable plan of administering the library is the one above expressed and understood by Mr. Astor; and that the donations in money, land, and otherwise, received from Mr. Astor, and to be hereafter received from him, and from other friends of learning, are received and will be administered according to such plan, and not otherwise."

Once fairly established, the care of the shelves became a routine matter and attention could be centred on a wise fostering of growth and on the preparation of a catalogue. For 1854 the sum of $1,123.30 was available for the purchase of new books, of which sum $1,000 was applied to a set of the octavo edition of Audubon's Birds and Quadrupeds. For the increase in other departments the general fund was drawn upon for about $13,000, resulting in purchases of periodicals — the number then received currently was 320 — books on art, English county history and heraldry, Halliwell's new edition of Shakespeare, and about 500 volumes on music.

A very practical appreciation of the institution was shown in the way of donations, — important gifts being received from the national government at Washington, from learned societies and from individuals in various parts of the country; the state government at Albany sent extensive selections of public documents of New York, the legislature of Maine by resolution of April 27, 1854, directed the Secretary of State to forward complete sets of state documents; Massachusetts and Rhode Island took a similar step in 1856, and in 1855 the British commissioners of patents presented a complete set of their publications.

The question of a catalogue was to Cogswell's mind a matter of prime importance; he felt, however, that a general alphabetical index of authors was inadvisable at the time, because of the expense entailed in printing it, because the rapid growth of the collection would soon render a general catalogue out of date, and because the official "slip" catalogue served to answer promptly inquiries made by readers in quest of particular books. Besides the memory of the librarians and personal examination of the shelves there was no guide to answer queries as to what books the library had on a given subject. For this reason he planned to issue his catalogue by departments, selecting first those groups most nearly complete, binding together these departmental catalogues when the whole was finished, and providing an alphabetical index of authors as a connecting link.

The first step towards this end came in the shape of a catalogue of the department of oriental and American linguistics,<sup>1</sup> intended avowedly not so much as a catalogue itself, but as material for an elaborate and worthy one. The cost of procuring the necessary fonts of type was too great to permit typographic printing, but lithography solved the difficulty. The copy went to press in 1854, and when printing was just begun the compiler, Frederick Otto Louis Roehrig, saw fit to abandon the work, leaving continuation and completion to Cogswell, who was not able to sign the preface until June, 1855.

He hoped next to take up the department of industrial art, but as work went on it was deemed best to do no further printing until the whole index had been more uniformly whipped into shape.

It may perhaps be best to follow to a conclusion the growth of the printed catalogue without strict chronological reference to other phases of library activities. By the end of 1855 Cogswell was able to report that the catalogue was finished, excepting only a small portion of history; the collection was grouped into fourteen leading departments, for each of which a separate catalogue was prepared, the whole filling thirty-two manuscript volumes. The alphabetical index to these separate catalogues formed the basis of the printed catalogue issued during 1857-1861. In this form and at this time it appeared against Cogswell's judgment but in accordance with the natural desires of the trustees to put before the public some tangible result of their work.

His note to Ticknor of November 1, 1857, sets forth in an interesting way the divergence between his own ideals and the course he was forced to take:

"I began the Catalogue against my own judgment of the expediency of the measure. . . . Now all agree that it was premature. Mr. Astor was the only one who had independence enough to speak out, he said it would be better to postpone it, — he knowing what he intended to do in the way of furnishing the means for increasing the library. When it was begun there was not a page in MS., we had no Catalogue but the slip one, and ever since I have been at work, like the leader of a gang of mowers, sure to have my heels cut off if I did not keep ahead. Now the work has been done in this way. I took the slip Catalogue, and examined it in the order of the alphabet, as expeditiously as I could, and finding at least three-quarters of the titles wrong in some respect, I had to correct or write over a good part of it, and never without the book before me, unless the title was as familiar to me as the first chapter of Genesis. The slips were then handed to a copyist who knows nothing whatever about books, and not a word of any language but English. . . . With the exception of the machine which undertakes to transcribe the MS. for the printer, not a hand has been put to the work except my own. The Library provides paper and pays the expense of printing, but until the manuscript goes into the printer's hands all the cost of it is my own. In justice to the Library I should say this is not demanded of me, it is my choice. . . . We have so many books coming in every day, I have preferred to hold back, and extend the matter of the Catalogue by a full analysis of all collected works, rather than complete, in ever so great dispatch, a mere list of the old skeleton library."

This careful preparation of copy enabled the actual work of printing to be done rapidly; the first part went to press late in 1856 and by the end of 1857 the first two volumes, of 500 pages each, comprising letters A to L inclusive; were run off. Two gifts of money from W. B. Astor, $5,000 in 1857 and $4,200 in 1858, provided means for increasing the collection by over 10,000 volumes, and these accessions necessitated suspension of printing until 1859 in which year the third volume (M-P) was finished. Removal into the addition to the library put up in 1856-1859 by W. B. Astor delayed further work in 1859, and absence of Cogswell in Europe during 1860 operated as a further delay. On his return, work went on quickly and in September, 1861, the fourth and final volume (Q-Z) was completed.<sup>1</sup>

His preface to volume 1, dated 1857, explained that the author index was to form part one of the entire catalogue, part two being reserved for the subject index planned to follow, in bulk to be about as large as part one, that is to fill about four volumes each of about five hundred royal octavo pages. This second part was never printed as he planned it, indeed never printed at all. A substitute was provided in the subject-index to the supplement of 1866, but this was by no means the elaborate subject catalogue his mind had pictured. It is highly improbable that a subject index to the whole collection will ever be printed or indeed would be advisable. Cogswell's idea of independently printed classed catalogues of various departments was at length realized when The New York Public Library began printing in its monthly Bulletin lists of books on its shelves relating to various subjects, but a printed catalogue of the whole, indexing authors and subjects, waits for a new time of vastly cheapened and vastly quickened typographic art.

At the time this first catalogue was completed the library contained about 115,000 volumes; the catalogue itself comprised 2,110 royal octavo pages; the edition consisted of 1,000 copies, run off at a total cost of $5,218.91, the cost per volume being $1.30, or $2.47 per page.

Though forced against his better judgment to print first an alphabetical index of authors, Cogswell did not give up his project of a guide to the collection by subjects. At their meeting on Wednesday, November 5, 1862, the Trustees voted that an additional volume of the catalogue be prepared, to contain the titles of books that had been added since the first one was issued, and a raisonné of the whole, and that Cogswell be requested to prepare it. In the meantime, however, ill health and advancing age had forced Cogswell to resign as Superintendent. On May 27, 1863, he wrote to Ticknor from Bordentown, N. J., where he was visiting: "I have been reflecting seriously upon what I ought to do with regard to the Catalogue. My conclusion is that it is expedient for me to finish the alphabet of supplement, first, because it is only completing the record of what was done by me in forming the Library, and next, because I am now so far on with it that I am unwilling to abandon the undertaking, if my health is sufficient for the work. . . I have concluded to spend the month of June in New York, which will enable me to get quite, or very nearly through with the preparation of the Supplemental Volume; and when I am through with that I shall be content to stop, and I know myself well enough to know that I should never be satisfied with anything short of it, if want of health and strength did not compel me to stop" — this from a man seventy-six years old.

Preparation of copy for his supplemental volume required more time than that month of June he had fondly hoped to be sufficient. Part of the time in New York, part in Cambridge, Massachusetts, he worked on it for the remainder of that year, during the whole of 1864, and well into 1865, writing to Ticknor September 4 of the latter year:

"I was counting upon having an idle month of August, and loafing it all away among friends on the North river, instead of which I kept here hard at work, resolved that I would not stop, until I had accomplished so much of my task as must be done here in the Library. This was not done until the evening of Saturday, September 2d, and now I have only to make a copy for printing from the slips and the tedious job will be off my hands, which has required four times as much time and labor as I had anticipated. . . . I have not had an hour's respite since July 5, and, during August, when I was left alone in the library [the building being closed for its customary cleaning], I worked regularly from fourteen to fifteen hours every day."

War times interfered with all civil employments and made it difficult to secure satisfactory paper stock or competent compositors. Not until 1866 was the volume finally set up and run off,<sup>1</sup> some 605 pages uniform in size with the first catalogue, the first 444 being taken up with the alphabetical list of books added since the first printing, and pages 447-605 consisting of a double column alphabetical index in brier type referring to authors or titles noted in the main catalogue or in the supplement. A characteristic preface sets forth his views of the importance of a subject index and explains why he chose an alphabetical arrangement instead of a classified grouping after some such analytical exposition of the operations of the human mind as had been drawn up by Brunet, Jefferson, or Schleiermacher. The cost of printing was $2,005.62, about $3.31 per page.

Returning now to the library as it stood in 1855, it will be recalled that the building had been planned to hold about 100,000 volumes; its shelving amounted to between twelve and thirteen thousand running feet, which left no room for growth — apparently a natural, almost a chronic state of all libraries, seared into the souls of all librarians. Relief in this case came in the announcement on October 31, 1855, of a deed of gift from W. B. Astor of the three lots of land immediately to the north of the building, eighty feet front and one hundred and twenty feet deep, bought by him for the library at a cost of $30,476. On this plot he offered to erect an addition, or rather an extension of the original building.

Work on the extension began at once, the foundations being laid by the end of 1856 with superstructure above the street level; another year was required to finish the walls and roof, another for the interior fittings and furnishings, and the summer of 1859 for removal and rearrangement of books. The new building was opened to the public on September 1, 1859, the south hall being devoted to science and the industrial arts, the north hall to history and literature; the whole number of volumes in the library was estimated at about 110,000. By this rearrangement a section of shelving was devoted to works most needed for reference, encyclopedias and dictionaries of various sorts, access to which was given to readers free on application to the librarians.

Statistics of readers and of volumes consulted by them were kept in 1854, when it was estimated that 30,000 volumes were consulted from February to December. The practice of recording such statistics seems to have been given up until 1859 when a record for July – December showed 30,000 volumes consulted, the average daily use being 210, or about 6,000 per month. In addition to this should be added those used by readers allowed the privilege of consulting books in the alcoves, of which use no accurate record was kept. During the eleven months the library was open in 1860 volumes consulted amounted to 59,516. The detailed analysis of these figures offers an interesting insight into the tastes of readers of the day — British literature afforded 9,942 volumes, Theology 3,548, American history 3,481, jurisprudence 3,257, medicine and surgery 2,742; the other departments with more than 1,000 volumes to their credit being (in order) British history, American literature, classical literature, natural history, Italian literature, archæology, French literature, philology, chemistry and physics, painting, patents and inventions, German literature, commerce, orientalia, French history, voyages and travels.

Washington Irving, president of the board of trustees, died at Sunnyside, November 28, 1859; he was succeeded as president by W. B. Astor, and as a trustee by Dr. Wolcott Gibbs, professor of chemistry and physics in the (then) Free Academy.

Cogswell passed his seventy-fifth birthday in September, 1861, and this year saw also the completion of the author catalogue of the library. Failing health caused him to offer his resignation as superintendent on November 6, 1861. It was accepted at the next meeting of the board, December 4, when Francis Schroeder, former pupil of his at Round Hill and American minister to Sweden in 1850, was appointed in his place. The former superintendent still retained his place as trustee. In 1862 W. B. Astor established an annuity fund of $5,000, yielding $300, payable to Cogswell in return for the bibliographical collection he had presented to the Library. In 1864 he left New York to make his home in Cambridge, taking with him the copy for the supplementary volume of catalogue and analytical index on which he was working. His resignation as trustee was accepted on November 30 of that year, when the board entered on their minutes the following expression of their appreciation of his services.

“A communication having been received by the President from Joseph G. Cogswell, LL.D., former Superintendent of the Library, resigning his office as Trustee, in consequence of his removal from the State of New York, the committee appointed to consider and report the steps proper to be taken by the Board, submitted the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

“RESOLVED, That the Trustees of the Astor Library deem it due to their late associate, and to the history of letters in America, to testify not only their sincere regret in losing the benefit of his counsel and co-operation in the management of their trust, but their high appreciation of his valuable and long continued services to the Institution from its origin, reaching back to his early intercourse with the late Mr. Astor, the honored founder of the Library, as his confidential friend and advisor.

“Throughout this period, embracing nearly twenty years, Doctor Cogswell has faithfully devoted to the Library the unremitting efforts of his well directed and spotless life, exhibiting a singular union of learning and ability, of efficiency and discretion, of modesty and taste, of energy, industry and disinterestedness, abundantly manifested in the Library itself the fruit of his untiring labors and a lasting evidence of the rare and varied qualifications he so happily combines.

“Without attempting fully to recount or record the services which have enduringly connected his name with the Institution, the Trustees would particularly acknowledge his eminent ability and varied Bibliographical learning in preparing the ‘Preliminary Index’ of books needed for a library of moderate extent in its early stages; a work which must materially facilitate the formation of other libraries throughout our country. They would further attest their appreciation of his activity, economy and business faculty, enabling him to purchase books at rates so advantageous as to carry the Library, without exceeding the original endowment, far beyond the limits of the Preliminary Index. Especially would they acknowledge his arduous and self-devoting labors in preparing and perfecting the ‘Alphabetical Catalogue’ of the existing Library, and his unwearied care in supervising its accurate publication, and above all, his important and highly valued services in arranging the ‘Analytical Catalogue,’ now approaching its completion.

“To this brief and imperfect outline of the official labors of Doctor Cogswell, the Trustees would affectionately add the expression of the pleasure which all of them have uniformly experienced in the genial and kindly intercourse of so many years with the associate and friend with whom they now part with so much reluctance, and of their heartfelt wishes for his continued health and happiness."

The vacancy in the board caused by his resignation was filled by election of William Jones Hoppin, art critic, editor of the Bulletin of the American Art Union, later secretary of the American legation at London.

The civil war affected the library not only by delaying printing of the supplement to the catalogue but also by raising the price of exchanges to such a level as almost wholly to cut off book purchases from Europe; little more could be attempted than to keep up the files of current foreign periodicals and to follow at a distance the current domestic book output. Purchases in 1860 amounted to 6,000 volumes; in 1861 they are not recorded; in 1862 they amounted to 500 volumes, in 1863 to 1,150, in 1864 to 367, in 1865 to 587. Expenditures for books in these years were: $13,328.16 in 1860, $8,616.57 in 1861, $2,726.78 in 1862, $3,255.59 in 1863, $5,969.11 in 1864, $3,375.53 in 1865. The current reports for these years state that the number of readers and of volumes consulted remained at about their usual figures, which were probably about 20,000 readers and 40,000 volumes consulted; "an increasing interest in it [has] been shown by the great increase in the numbers of its casual visitors."

Another gift from W. B. Astor marked the year 1866 — $50,000, of which $20,000 was to be used for purchase of books, the remainder for the general funds of the library; this gift brought the sum total presented by him thus far to $300,000, not to mention the installation of a new system of heating apparatus in 1867 for which he paid $6,545.74. Of the $700,000 received from the Astors, father and son (increased about two per cent. by investments, etc.) $283,324.98 had been expended for site, building, and equipment; $203,012.38 for books, binding, freight, etc., leaving an endowment fund of $229,000. The income in 1866 was $11,664.31, expenses $8,975.31.

In their report for 1868 the trustees gave a summary of the progress of their trust in the twenty years it had been in their charge. After reference to the fact that of the ten trustees named in the will of the founder but two, W. B. Astor, president, and Samuel B. Ruggles, secretary, then remained, death having taken away most of the others, the report goes on to state:

"It will appear by the report of the treasurer not only that all the purposes thus proposed by the founder of the library have been fully carried out, but that the funds and property in the hands of the trustees, under each of the heads above mentioned, have been largely increased:

"1st. The sum of $100,000 appropriated for the library edifice and its site, has been increased to $257,631.85. The site designated in the codicils contained 65 feet front on Lafayette place by 120 feet in depth. The site actually occupied contains 130 feet front by 120 feet deep, while the edifice has been doubled in dimensions.

"2d. In place of $120,000 appropriated for the purchase of books, the trustees have actually expended, up to the 31st of December last, $240,864.15, including $7,224.53 for printing the catalogues. It was originally supposed that the library might contain fifty thousand volumes. The number of volumes now on the shelves is stated by the superintendent to be 137,533, of which 2,300 have been obtained in the year 1868. The singular ability, industry and economy with which Dr. Joseph G. Cogswell, the first superintendent of the library, selected and purchased the larger part of the books which it now contains, has been specially noticed in former reports by the trustees to the Legislature.

"3d. The principal of the fund ($180,000), appropriated for the maintaining and gradually increasing the library, has been kept duly invested as directed by the founder, while $35,898.35 of principal has been added to the amount, making the whole $215,898.35.

"4th. The trustees have expended $25,499.69 in equipping the library with its necessary shelving and furniture, and $6,545.74 in addition has been expended in steam apparatus for warming the building.

"The aggregate of the amounts stated under the four preceding heads is - - - - - $736,439.73

"The surplus yearly income from the principal fund devoted to maintaining and increasing the library since it came to the hands of the trustees, after deducting the yearly expense in maintaining the library, has been up to the 31st of December last - - - - - 81,008.81

"Original appropriation as above - - - - - 400,000.00

"Showing an accumulation in the hands of the trustees of $255,430.92 apart from any increase in the value of the library edifice and site, and of the books beyond their actual cost. . .

"The current yearly expenses, including the salaries of the superintendent and librarians, with the necessary fuel and repairs, with Croton water rent, and other contingencies, have so far increased with the general advance of prices that the net yearly income of the fund for maintaining and increasing the library amounted for the year 1868 only to $2,180.83."

The second period of the library's life may now be said to have commenced. Those who had been most intimately connected with its founding had nearly all died. The aggressive vigor of youth gave place to the quiet insistent industry of maturity. The character of the collection was fixed and was known throughout the country. Indicative of its place in the mind of New York was the fact that it had been held one of the things the Prince of Wales must visit when he was in the city; indicative of its place in the mind of the country was the fact that it was selected as depository of the papers and records of the United States Sanitary Commission when that organization dissolved some few years later. From now on its annals are a record of growth, of gifts, of usefulness, less picturesque and varied than for the first twenty years, but none the less beneficial.

Cogswell had hoped to secure for the first-book treasures the first printed Bible, the first printed edition of Homer, the first folio of Shakespeare; he secured two, but failed to get the Gutenberg Bible. To this group may very properly be added in an American library the letter of Columbus announcing the discovery of America. In 1872 William Waldorf Astor secured from Quaritch (who priced it in his catalogue at £140) a copy of Stephen Planck's thirty-three line edition of the letter in Latin — not the first edition, to be sure, but an early one. What is presumably the first edition, (in Spanish) came to this country twenty years later when the Lenox Library added it to its treasures.

Gifts from the president of the trustees, William B. Astor, came from time to time. In 1873 he presented a large and miscellaneous collection by which many deficiencies were filled, making besides a gift of money to supply items lacking in the classical and philological departments. Thus about 600 volumes, mainly classical authors in the Teubner editions with the necessary critical apparatus, were added. From him in 1874 came the fourth edition of Vergil printed in folio by Anthony Koburger at Nürnberg in 1492, and in the same year came from Dr. Austin Flint, jr., the first edition of Harvey's "Exercitatio anatomica de motu cordis et sanguinis in animalibus" (Frankfurt, 1628, 4°).

Cogswell had resigned as superintendent on November 6, 1861. His resignation was accepted on the 4th of December following, when Francis Schroeder was appointed to succeed him. Schroeder served ably and acceptably for ten years. Then he offered his resignation which was accepted on June 7, 1871, when the board entered on their minutes their regrets at losing him. As his successor the board appointed Dr. Edward R. Straznicky. The latter, then 51 years old, born in Moravia, had fled from Austria after the defeat of the Hungarian nationalist army and, after residence in England and in Philadelphia, had been employed in the library since 1859.

In this connection the following extract from a letter dated April 24, 1871, from Cogswell, then in his eighty-fourth year, to Mrs. Mailliard, may not be wholly without interest:

“Soon after my last to you Mr. Schroeder sent in his resignation to the Trustees of the Astor Library, and I was requested to look up a successor for them. This has brought so wide a correspondence upon me, that I have had to write thirty letters, either in answer to applicants for office, or to inquire of others whom I considered eligible for it, if they would accept provided I could obtain it for them.”

The year 1871 was marked further by the death of Cogswell, in Cambridge, on November 26. At the meeting of the trustees on the 6th of December following William J. Hoppin, Alexander Hamilton, and Samuel B. Ruggles were appointed to draw up a suitable minute to be entered on the records of the board. Their report, presented on January 10, 1872, was as follows:

“The trustees of the Astor Library, on the resignation on the 30th of November, 1864, by Joseph G. Cogswell, LL.D., the first superintendent of the library, of his office as trustee, had the grateful privilege of recording their acknowledgment of the constancy with which, for nearly twenty years, he had devoted to this institution the unremitting efforts of his well directed and spotless life. They took occasion to indicate his great ability in composing the ‘Preliminary Index of Books needed for a Library’; his extraordinary judgment and economy in purchasing their own collection, and the diligence and extensive bibliographical knowledge he had displayed in preparing the ‘Alphabetical Catalogue.’ They added to this their sincere regret in losing the benefit of his counsel and co-operation in the management of their trust, and their heartfelt wishes for his continued health and happiness.

“The trustees have now, seven years after thus taking leave of Dr. Cogswell, as an active colleague, heard of his decease at Cambridge, in the State of Massachusetts, on the 26th day of November last, and they desire to record anew their affectionate admiration of his character and sorrow for his loss.

“For the whole period between the removal of Dr. Cogswell from New York to the date of his lamented death, he continued to take a lively interest in the affairs of the library. He was able to complete, not long after his retirement, the ‘Analytical Catalogue,’ upon which he was engaged at that time. This book, if it had been produced by a mature and vigorous scholar, at the most robust period of his life, would have been a remarkable proof of knowledge and practical skill; but as the work of an octogenarian, embarrassed by bodily infirmities, it may be considered a literary curiosity, as well as the most valuable American contribution to the department to which it belongs.

“Dr. Cogswell did not confine himself to these more quiet labors in behalf of the library, but frequently gave to the trustees the benefit of his active help and his wise counsels whenever they were solicited; and this, always with great delicacy and disinterestedness. There was something singularly touching in his devotion, at an age when such sentiments usually become feeble and silent, to an institution remote from his residence, and with which he had scarcely any ties except those of memory.

"The trustees will not attempt, in this brief entry in their minutes to expatiate upon those numerous excellent traits in the character of their former colleague, of which his biographer might find abundant proofs and illustrations. They will only permit themselves to mention his simple and unaffected kindness of manner, the gracious urbanity with which he discharged all his official duties, his loyalty as a friend, his fresh and genial impulses, which overcame all the sluggishness of age, his fidelity and affectionate considerateness as a teacher, his absolute freedom from literary and personal ambition, and his unstained integrity and purity of life.

"The recollection of these excellences will make his memory forever dear to all who had the privilege of knowing him, and particularly to those who have been associated with him in the care of an institution which was the center of his hopes and the dearest object of his labors."

Events of the few next succeeding years have been partially summarized above, and little need be added but to call attention to constantly increasing use made of the library as indicated in the statistical tables. Volumes consulted had increased from 59,516 in 1860 to 135,065 in 1875, that is 129 per cent., the population of the city increasing from 814,254 in 1860 to 988,618 in 1875, that is 22 per cent.

The death of W. B. Astor on November 24, 1875 was officially announced to the board at their meeting on December 9 following, by the senior member of the board, Samuel B. Ruggles, who moved that John A. Dix and William J. Hoppin be appointed a committee to draw up suitable resolutions. The minute adopted by the board at its next meeting was as follows:

"The lamented death of William B. Astor, on the 24th day of November last, enables the trustees to discharge a duty which their regard for his wishes prevented them from performing in his lifetime, and that is to express in an official form their deep respect for his character and gratitude for his services. Such was his singular modesty and his unaffected dislike of whatever might possibly be considered to savor of ostentation, that his colleagues frequently refrained from making even those customary and formal acknowledgments of benefactions which, under other circumstances, would have been proper.

"Mr. Astor was the second private individual named as a trustee in the will of the founder of the library. The first was Mr. Washington Irving, whom he succeeded as president in the year 1860. He has discharged the duties of that office ever since, and in a manner which endeared him to all his colleagues. They remember with peculiar pleasure his courteous manner, his excellent judgment, and his wise hesitation in adopting any novel or untried experiment. His punctuality was remarkable. He was always the earliest one to appear at the board, and nothing but grave illness prevented his attendance. So late as the 10th of November last, only a fortnight before his death, neither the excessive inclemency of the weather nor the demand for indulgence which his eighty years of age might have suggested, hindered him from presiding at our meeting.

“He was as constant and regular in his gifts to the library as he was in the performance of his official duties. He began to bestow them at its organization and he continued them until the day of his death. His filial reverence, which was one of his conspicuous traits, undoubtedly prompted him to extend the work which his father had so auspiciously commenced.

“But his own love of letters, and his knowledge of the wants of American scholars were also active agents in inducing him to increase the resources of our institution, and to place it in the way of becoming at some future day one of the great libraries of the world. Nobody knew better than himself that it is not yet entitled to that rank, but he had a just appreciation of its peculiar merits, and he believed that after a certain point had been attained, a slow and steady growth, contemporaneous with the demands which should be made upon it from day to day, was more wholesome and useful than any sudden or extraordinary additions. His gifts, therefore, were not only liberal, but they were timely and judicious. It seems proper to enumerate them in this minute, both in justice to his memory and as important facts in the history of the library.

“Before the first building was completed, he added a considerable sum to the fund to make it fireproof. Shortly afterward he placed more than fifteen thousand dollars at the disposal of Mr. Cogswell to buy books for a technological department. In 1855 he conveyed to the trustees three parcels of land adjoining the original building, and erected thereon a new structure in harmony with, but of greater capacity than the other, at a cost of upwards of one hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars. In 1857 he contributed five thousand dollars, and in 1860 six thousand dollars for books. In 1862 he established an annuity for the purchase of Dr. Cogswell’s bibliographical collection, and in 1866 he made a further donation of fifty thousand dollars for the general purposes of the institution. In addition to these gifts, there were others of money and books which are not specified in the treasurer’s account, but which, as stated in the trustees’ report of 1867, had made the total of his donations to that date more than three hundred thousand dollars. In that same year he paid between six and seven thousand dollars for a steam heating apparatus, and since then five thousand dollars for additions to the Classical Department.

“The simple statement of these contributions without any elaborate panegyric, is sufficient to show the magnitude of the debt which the lovers of learning throughout the country owe to Mr. Astor.

“The trustees cannot deny themselves the pleasure of joining to this record of his public service an acknowledgment of the gratification which his personal relations with them have afforded. Mr. Astor had excellent natural abilities, which were carefully cultivated by study and observation. He had the advantage in early youth of the instruction and companionship of Bunsen, afterward the distinguished scholar and diplomatist. He followed the regular courses at Göttingen and his note-books of lectures, which he had written out in German and which have been accidentally preserved, discover a self-denying industry seldom shown by young men in his position. The pleasant impression he left in those academic circles was long remembered, and many years afterward was mentioned to a friend and colleague who was visiting Göttingen. Mr. Astor was a good linguist, and thus was able to improve his privilege of mingling in the refined society of several European capitals in the early part of the present century. He had considerable powers of observation and a retentive memory, and his descriptions of Madame De Stael and other celebrated personages he had met were interesting and instructive.

“After his return to America, he cultivated the acquaintance of leading men in professional, literary and artistic life, and he was always among the first to receive distinguished visitors from abroad. His hospitality was discriminating as well as generous, and his entertainments were remarkable not only for their taste and elegance, but also for that which was far more grateful to his guests, an intelligent recognition of each one’s particular claims to attention. He was a skillful judge of character, and sometimes seasoned his conversation with a trace of humor which surprised those who had chiefly known him in his connection with affairs. He constantly read the best books and was particularly interested in the letters and biographies of celebrated men, upon which his comments were discriminating, although he disliked so much to appear to make a parade of learning that it was only by some happy accident that his large information upon these and kindred topics could be ascertained. His manners were simple and cordial, and in his courtesy to women and young people, he recalled the best days of the old school. The quiet kindness with which he greeted his friends, without any undue demonstration by word or gesture, was peculiarly grateful. If it was calm and unaffected, it was also invariable, and was never chilled by advancing age or illness, or the pre-occupation of affairs. His politeness was not a varnish. It was something inherent in the grain, which all the rubbing of a long, and in some respects, an anxious life, only made to shine more brightly. It seems to be descending somewhat from the dignity of the subject to add that with such refined tastes and natural kindness of heart, Mr. Astor never, by any possibility, gave the impression in his manners or conversation that he was the possessor of large wealth. But this extraordinary absence of every species of ostentation was so striking a feature of his character, that any sketch of him, however hasty, would be incomplete without noticing it.

“In concluding this imperfect memorial of Mr. Astor, the trustees may be permitted to say that his home was gladdened and adorned by a long and happy union with one whose tastes, manners and sensibilities were singularly akin to his own. These relations as well as those connected with religious duty, are too intimate and sacred to be enlarged upon here. It is sufficient to state that they who knew him best in those regards found abundant reasons for a love and a respect which grew purer and stronger with advancing years."

By his will Mr. Astor bequeathed to the library two hundred and forty-nine thousand dollars, of which sum forty-nine thousand dollars represented the remainder of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars he had planned to add to the endowment after deducting the value of his gifts made during his lifetime, and two hundred thousand dollars comprised a bequest additional to the two hundred and fifty thousand; the later bequest was payable in three equal successive annual installments, the first to be paid at the expiration of one year from his death, the whole to be kept as capital or permanent fund, except that not to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars might be spent for books. His executors anticipated by two years the payment of the bequest, the last installment of the sum total being made in November, 1876, less than a year after the death of the testator. Besides this bequest from W. B. Astor, the library received from John Jacob Astor in February, 1876, the sum of $10,000 for the purchase of books.

He was succeeded as trustee in February, 1876, by Alexander Hamilton, who had been elected a trustee in 1868 but had resigned in 1873 because of absence in Europe. At the meeting of the board in April following, on motion of the two senior members, Ruggles and Dix, Hamilton was chosen president. Ruggles felt called upon to resign his position as secretary, which he had held from the organization of the board in 1849, on account of ill health, and was succeeded by William J. Hoppin. The latter, after a few months' service, resigned to take the post of first secretary at the American legation in London. Daniel D. Lord was then chosen temporarily as secretary, the appointment being made permanent in the following year. Professor Henry Drisler of Columbia College succeeded Hoppin as trustee. Dr. Straznicky, superintendent, died February 9, 1876, and on March 8 following, J. Carson Brevoort (a trustee) was chosen to fill the vacancy.

By this time the maintenance fund had increased from the $180,000 of 1854 to $410,000; the amount expended for books from $105,979.11 to $297,714.57, the number of volumes from 80,000 to 165,854; the number of readers from about 16,000 to 47,853, of volumes consulted from about 30,000 to 143,545.

In this year 1876 a beginning was made on a public card catalogue. For books purchased since 1866 there was available for the public no index of subjects other than the knowledge possessed by the librarians as to the books on the shelves. The official catalogue, supplementary to the printed volumes, had been an index by authors, written on interleaved copies of the printed catalogues. Readers filled out cards for books wanted, then handed them to the attendants, who examined the catalogues to learn whether they were in the library and if so to find their location. Under the new arrangement these supplementary entries were copied on cards about 5 by 3 inches in size, the report for 1876 stating (page 9) "eight thousand title and cross-reference cards have been prepared in continuation of the printed catalogue of the late Dr. Cogswell, which ends in 1866. These have been duplicated for the interior service of the library."

The library had been founded as a general reference library, and Dr. Cogswell and his successors had uniformly attempted to secure for it books of first importance in every department of human knowledge. At the end of 1877 it had on its shelves 177,387 volumes, well distributed among all departments; extensive increases in any department meant crossing the line that separated the needs of the general student from those of the specialist. It was now time to consider which departments might most wisely be extended. Mr. Brevoort in his report for 1877 brought up the question by stating that: "It collects works in every branch of human knowledge, and the additions had to be apportioned with a view to acquiring such works as seemed to be more urgently needed in each of them. As there are, however, several libraries in the city especially devoted to the departments of theology, jurisprudence, medicine, natural history and geography, I have considered it advisable to direct the chief expenditure towards the completion of other important subjects. Among these may be mentioned philosophy, sociology, technology and the useful arts, history, archæology and linguistics, the fine arts, numismatics and bibliography." This did not mean, of course, that purchases in the first named groups would cease, but it did mean that within those groups the library would attempt to acquire only works necessary for the general reader, that in the latter groups the specialist as well as the general reader would be provided for.

In February, 1878, Mr. Brevoort resigned his position as superintendent, being unable to give to the library the full service of his time without injuring his own affairs. His successor, Robbins Little, was appointed in April following. Mr. Little was a graduate of Yale (1851), where he also took his Master's degree. After a course in the Harvard Law School he practised in

New York, held a position as instructor in international law at the United States naval academy at Annapolis, and later served as examiner of claims in the war department at Washington. He retained his position as superintendent until 1896, after consolidation; in 1883 he was chosen a trustee of the library, to succeed William Waldorf Astor.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Brevoort resigned as trustee in September, 1878, being succeeded by Clarence King.

A gift of $10,000 this year from John Jacob Astor made possible important accessions in the departments of American history and oriental literature, 3,516 volumes being purchased during the twelve-month. In addition to these, some 2,342 volumes were received by gift, the more important being six manuscript volumes (Epistolæ Apostolicæ, in Greek, of the eleventh century, from the library of the Duke of Sussex; De Disciplina et Perfectione Monastice Conversationis, illuminated, on vellum, of about 1350; the Vulgate, probably English work of the fourteenth century; Boethius' De Consolatione Philosophiæ, of the fifteenth century; Aristotle's De Virtutibus et Vitiis, in Greek and Latin, early fifteenth century; and Claudianus's De Raptu Proserpinæ, of the Italian renaissance) and two handsome specimens of early printing — Gutenberg's Catholicon of 1460 and Gunther Zainer's Bible printed at Augsburg in 1477, the first German Bible printed with a date — all given by John Jacob Astor; the fourth folio Shakespeare given by Alexander Hamilton, Rymer's Fœdera by Charles O'Connor, Richard Owen's Researches on the Fossil Remains of the Mammals of Australia by William Astor, and a complete set of the publications of the United States Hydrographic Office from the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department.

That the library was considered something more than a local institution was evinced this year when the United States Sanitary Commission, having completed its task, turned over for safe keeping its archives, consisting of all its correspondence, reports, account books, hospital directories, printed reports, histories, maps and charts, claims of some 51,000 soldiers and sailors investigated by it, miscellaneous papers, etc. The library promised that they be preserved and be at all times accessible to the public.

In October, 1878, was begun the publication of an author list of "Recent accessions to the Astor Library," printed quarterly until January, 1880, and then semi-annually in January and July until July, 1885. About this same time the library took part in the cooperative subject index to periodical literature edited by Dr. William F. Poole. Heretofore current serial publications had not been available for readers until the volume was completed and bound; but this policy was now changed by giving out current numbers for consultation, a list of titles received being printed in 1879. Binding of books and periodicals had fallen somewhat into arrears of late; in 1878 vigorous steps were taken to remedy this defect, 1,096 volumes being bound that year and 2,331 in 1879, of which latter number 1,000 were shipped for that purpose to Henry Stevens in London.

Of the card catalogue Mr. Little remarked in his first report as superintendent: "The card catalogue adopted of late years, for books acquired since the last volume of the printed catalogue was published, continues to be of much service to persons consulting the library. This sort of catalogue, though overrated, perhaps, except for accessions, is coming into such general use that publishers may soon find it worth while to print a few hundred title cards with every work of permanent value. Such cards would serve at once as an advertisement, a handy and precise order, and the means of putting a book at once upon library shelves." His comment in his second report (for 1879) was as follows: "The card catalogue continues to be kept up by the sub-librarian, assisted by the curator of patents. The inventory or author branch is threefold, one in each hall for the use of the officers, and a third near the entrance for the use of the public. A title card is made for every accession, and copied three times. A copy is put in each of the author catalogues, and the original in the index or subject branch under the head to which the book chiefly relates. The subject catalogue is open to the public. Cross references are made where manifestly required, but nothing like the elaborate index at Harvard college can be attempted at present. Without reference to the question whether manuscript cards are the best permanent form for a catalogue, there can be no doubt that in some form a good index to a library, extending not only to books but to important parts of books, doubles the practical value of the collection."

Various changes in the board of trustees took place in 1879. General Dix died on April 21, and was succeeded by Henry Codman Potter; Walter Langdon resigned because of an extended stay in Europe, and John L. Cadwalader was chosen in his place; Clarence King accepted the post of Director of the United States Geological Survey, which necessitated his removal to Washington, Lewis Rutherford being his successor. Lord resigned his office as secretary and Professor Drisler was chosen to fill the vacancy.

The first, or South, hall had been opened January 9, 1854, with 80,000 volumes on its shelves. The addition given by W. B. Astor and opened on September 1, 1859, doubled the capacity of the library, but the hundred and sixty thousand mark was passed in 1876, and at the end of twenty years the library had become inconveniently crowded, as there were 189,114 volumes on the shelves at the end of 1879. On December 5, 1879, John Jacob Astor gave to the library the three lots of ground adjoining the northern side of the library plot, seventy-five feet front and one hundred feet deep, on which he put up a second addition to the building, sixty-five feet wide and covering the full depth of the lot, of the same general style of architecture as the other two halls. This gave a building of 195 feet front, with a capacity of nearly four hundred thousand volumes. The walls and roof of the addition were finished in 1880 and on October 10, 1881, the completed structure was opened to the public, the library being closed the four months preceding to allow the necessary moving and readjustment. The main entrance was moved from the south to the middle hall, and a room for the trustees was constructed in the place it had formerly occupied. An attic was added to the middle hall and a double flight of steps leading to the new entrance. This entrance opened upon a spacious hall, decorated with twenty-four marble busts from the antique, presented by Mrs. Franklin H. Delano. A new staircase, rising in a double flight to a central landing, led from this hall to the main floor of the library. The catalogues stood at the head of the stairs to the east, and beyond them was placed the general delivery desk. This allowed the two side reading rooms on the north and south to be set aside for readers alone, each having seating capacity for sixty-four readers. Around the head of the stairway in the middle hall stood glass showcases for the exhibition of manuscripts, early printed books, and other literary rarities. The rearrangement gave on the ground floor two rooms to the south of the entrance hall for a picture gallery and a board room, one large room to the north of the entrance hall, two in the rear for the storage of books, and threw the engineer's quarters into the northeast corner of the building.

During 1879 the Japanese government presented a representation of their national literature, embracing the standard works of poetry, fiction, geography, history, religion, philology, together with an assortment of ornamental designs; through Viscount Cranbrook, secretary for India in Beaconsfield's cabinet, the library received a large collection of official publications relating to India; New Zealand, New South Wales, Canada, Italy, France, Prussia were moved also to make valuable contributions of documents and statistical material. Such gifts as these and the Hepworth Dixon collection of English civil war pamphlets, about five hundred in number, presented in 1880 by John Jacob Astor, were obviously out of place in any institution but one for research, and the superintendent felt called on to say in his report for 1880: "The excellent public libraries that have grown up in many places (though not yet in New York) from the same impulse as the common school system, and supported in the same way, are from the nature of the case primarily popular. Our college libraries are primarily for reference in connection with the ordinary work of the college. Even the library of congress is primarily what its name imports. But this library occupies a peculiarly independent position as a library for general use without any such special character. In this respect it has more resemblance to the national libraries of other countries, an important function of which is understood to be, to encourage high studies and assist in the reform of superior instruction. Of course, for such purposes, a library should present not only digested and long accepted results, but the sciences in process of growth, and, as far as may be, the actual sources. As this library becomes more complete, and is kept closer to the advance of intelligence; its use in aid of research, which has always been considerable, will naturally become more general and satisfactory." In this connection it may be of interest to recall that as just at the time Cogswell in 1854 was stating the impossibility of maintaining a free library in a city so populous as New York his friends in Boston were establishing a free circulating library in that city, so in this year 1880, when Little was calling attention to the absence of a popular library in New York, a sewing class teacher in Grace Church parish was laying the foundations of what was later to become the New York Free Circulating Library, eventually the circulation centre of the larger library system of which the Astor library was to become a part.

It will probably be best here to take up the history of the Astor catalogue and to follow it on until the time of consolidation without regard to its chronological relation to other library matters. The first catalogue was issued in the four years 1857-1861, and recorded approximately 115,000 volumes. The supplement of 1866 recorded the accessions of five years, about 15,000 volumes, and carried with it an index to subjects, imperfect, inadequate, unsatisfactory — the work of a man eighty years of age, one of the earliest subject indexes to a large collection of reference works produced in this country, at first sight forcing from the reader an exclamation of protest and pity but causing that same reader, the longer he examines and uses it, to modify his first opinion and to admit that in spite of its imperfections it is the work of a man who knew books and knew how to guide others to them.

Towards the end of the third decade of the existence of the library the volumes on its shelves rapidly neared the 200,000 mark — passing that figure in 1882 — and thus left nearly half the library unrecorded except in the shape of brief entries noted in manuscript in interleaved copies of the Cogswell catalogue, and the cards begun by Mr. Brevoort in 1876 — a state of affairs as unsatisfactory to the trustees as to the public, though the former were not as voluble in proclaiming their feelings as the latter. A new author catalogue was decided on, to include titles of all works received since the first catalogue was published, and to this work Mr. Charles Alexander Nelson was called in 1881. Mr. Nelson was a Harvard graduate of the class of 1860, fitted for this new task by service in the Harvard library and by a wide experience in the Boston book trade.

Preliminary examination of the field quickly showed that the titles noted in the Supplement of 1866 and in the interleaved copies of the main catalogue and on cards were inadequate for a satisfactory catalogue worthy of the institution and of American librarianship of 1880, which meant that all titles in the new catalogue must be made from the books themselves. It was not until 1884 that the contract for printing could be made, and the first batch of copy be sent to the Riverside Press of Cambridge. A fuller quotation of titles than in the first catalogue, a more extensive analysis of the contents of collected or comprehensive works, and greater attention to securing full names of authors were other elements of delay. The first volume<sup>1</sup> was published in April, 1886; it included entries from A through D, and consisted of 1,118 pages, the same section in the first catalogue running through 494 pages. For later volumes of the new index it was thought best to shorten the entries as much as possible, to which task Hon. John L. Cadwalader and Professor Drisler, a special committee of the board of trustees, gave their personal attention, reading practically every slip that went to the printer.

Volume two (E-K) containing 956 pages appeared in the winter of 1886-7, the third (L-Q), 1,088 pages, in the autumn of 1887, and the fourth and last, 1,114 pages, in the summer of 1888. As a catalogue and as a printed book it was a thoroughly satisfactory piece of work, well deserving of the diploma of honorable mention awarded for it to Mr. Nelson in 1901 at the Pan American Exposition at Buffalo and the exposition held at Charleston, S. C., the same year. The entire cost of printing was borne by Mr. Astor and was given in the report of the trustees for 1888 as nearly $40,000.

So much for the printed catalogues. The card catalogues present a problem of greater complexity.

As has been stated before, Mr. Brevoort began, in 1876, a catalogue, on cards, recording a part of the accessions received after 1866, one set of cards for the use of the public and a duplicate set for official use. This was at first mainly a subject or rather a broadly grouped classed catalogue; the cards were about the size of the present standard card, that is about 5 inches long by 3 inches high. For author entries reliance was made upon the interleaved copies of the Cogswell printed catalogue and upon a set of author cards — by no means a complete record — for public use.

In 1880 when work began upon the new printed catalogue this card catalogue was closed; its author cards were destroyed when the new catalogue was issued, but revision of the subject group continued as occasion offered until after consolidation.

A new catalogue on cards of standard size was now begun, to include works received after 1880. This was a catalogue for official use only; its cards were arranged by authors, to provide a basis for a future printed catalogue of books received after 1880, and additional cards for all important works were filed with them until after consolidation. The alphabetical sequence of authors was in a measure broken into by forming within the catalogue several groups such as "French literature," "German literature," etc., each with its own alphabetical arrangement; a further complication was introduced by the practice of entering continuations of works noted in these smaller groups, not with the first card (which was filed in one of these smaller groups) but in the main alphabetical arrangement.

Besides this catalogue (the "Bulletin" as it was called, or continuation catalogue — strictly an official record, be it remembered) there were two other card catalogues recording works received since 1880, one for the public, the other for official use. These catalogues were on cards about five inches long by two inches high, the official cards being of thinner stock than those for the public; the arrangement in each was of authors and subjects in one alphabetical sequence.

These three card catalogues (1, the "Bulletin," on large cards, mainly an author arrangement; 2, the public "small card" catalogue, a dictionary catalogue of authors and subjects; 3, the official "small card" catalogue, likewise a dictionary arrangement of authors and subjects, but written on thinner cards) were continued until after consolidation.

After consolidation, in 1896, the official catalogue — on standard size cards — was confined to a record of authors alone; the public catalogue — likewise of standard size cards, opened for use in April, 1897 — contained a record of authors and subjects in one alphabetical sequence. But until this time the reader had five catalogues to consult: (1) the printed catalogue of Cogswell in four volumes; (2) the Supplement of 1866 in one volume; (3) the printed index of subjects issued with the Supplement of 1866; (4) the subject catalogue on cards, indexing books received between 1866 and 1880; (5)

THE ASTOR LIBRARY, SOUTH HALL

From Harper's Weekly, Supplement, October 2, 1875

the "small card" catalogue of authors and subjects, for books received since 1880. Behind the desk there were for consultation catalogues corresponding to numbers 1, 2, 3, and 5 just mentioned, and, in addition, the cards in the "Bulletin" or continuation group.

This multiplicity of catalogues drew upon the library no little adverse criticism of which the following samples may be not without interest. The first appeared in the New York Times of Wednesday, June 8, 1881 (page 5, column 5), under the heading "A Library's Buried Treasures."

"According to the last annual report the Astor Library contained 192,547 books, and the value of the collection is conceded by all who are familiar with it. As a library of reference it is probably without a superior in the country. But the value of such a collection depends much upon the facilities offered for ascertaining what is contained in it. A library without a suitable catalogue is a collection of buried treasures. The original catalogue of the Astor Library, in four volumes, prepared by Dr. Cogswell, and issued in 1857-61, was a creditable work for its time, although it lacks many features which are now deemed indispensable in a catalogue. But it shows honest and faithful work, and the institution would be fortunate if the same care had been taken in the additions that have been made to it. In 1866 an analytical catalogue was issued as a fifth volume of the regular catalogue, together with a supplementary alphabetical catalogue of the accessions to the library up to that time. The work abounds in errors, and was evidently prepared by unskillful and careless hands. The card catalogue of authors and of subjects, which is a continuation of the supplementary catalogue, and which is supposed to give the additions to the library from 1866 to the present time, is open to severe criticism. Its imperfections are as annoying to the frequenter of the library as some of its blunders in classification are ludicrous. It is amusing for instance, to find Balzac's social satire "Physiologie du Mariage ou Meditations de Philosophie Eclectique sur le Bonheur et la Malheur Conjugal," entered under Medicine in the subject catalogue, and to find the book itself in the alcove devoted to that department, on the same shelf with manuals of etherization and operative surgery, and treatises on phosphorus and club-foot.

"But here is an instance of a frequent type of imperfect cataloguing which is less ridiculous but more annoying. The valuable and important papers of Gay Lussac, Arago, Louis Dumas, Chevreul, and other eminent writers on chemistry and physics, contained in the 'Annales de Chimie et de Physique,' are catalogued merely as 'Annales de Chimie et de Physique continued to 1880.' No reference is made to the authors of the various papers, and no account given of the different series extending from 1856 to 1880. A similar preference of generalities to details is noticeable in scores of cases. The card on which is written 'Annales des Sciences Naturelles: Zoologie continued to 1880; Botanique continued to 1878,' is no guide to the contents of the 132 volumes thus concisely catalogued. Neither does the title 'Annales d'Hygiène

Publique continued to 1880,' throw much light upon the contents of the 54 volumes thereof published from 1856 to 1880. The same comprehensive style is adopted in the case of certain mysterious pamphlets entered as 'New-York City and State — Pamphlets relating to — in box marked "New York City and State."' This is a singular method of disposing of valuable contributions of papers on important subjects, and the manner in which they relate to the City or County of New-York is only to be ascertained by rummaging through the entire miscellaneous collection. The reader who is accustomed to the use of a catalogue that does not sacrifice everything to brevity will be struck with the large number of cases in which the name of a collection, but not of the compiler, is given at the Astor Library. Thus, François Guessard's 'Anciens Poetes de la France' is not catalogued under the compiler's name, but merely as a collection. This, also, is the case in many instances with authors and editors. No indication is given of the authorship of William Bolla's 'Ancient Right of the English Nation to the American Fishery,' or of George Stephens editorial connection with the Anglo-Saxon song of the tenth or eleventh century, called the 'King of Birds.' (Antiq. Soc. Archæologia, 30.)

"A striking illustration of the degree of intelligence displayed in transferring the names from a title page to the catalogue may be seen in the entering of Gustav Wustmann's 'Life and Works of Apelles,' among the A's in the authors' card catalogue as 'Apelles' Leben und Werke von Gustav Wustmann.' The visitor to the library who seeks for Napoleon III's 'Histoire de Jules Caesar,' will not find it on the card catalogue of authors, although both the French and the American editions of the work are upon the shelves. But he will be astonished to discover a clue to some heretofore unknown works by the same hand, to wit: Certain pamphlets given in the card catalogue of authors as 'Napoleon III. — Brochures Politiques, Paris, v. y., 7 vols., 8vo.' Upon calling for these, and receipting for them at the Librarian's desk as 'Napoleon III's Brochures,' the reader will be surprised at the contents of the seven volumes. They are made up of a variety of political pamphlets, about 100 in number, by different authors. These are specimens of the swarm of pamphlets that came out in Paris during the second Empire, some of them anonymous, and others by well-known hands. There are 'Affaires de Rome,' by John Lemoinue; 'La Nouvelle Carte d'Europe,' by Edmond About; 'Garibaldi,' by Alexis La Messine; 'L'Excommunication,' by Hippolyte Castille; 'La Prusse en 1860,' by Edmond About; 'Le Pape et le Congres'; 'Le Politique et le Droit Chrétien,' and a variety of similar productions. Yet they are set down as the works of Napoleon III., and are not to be found entered under the names of their actual author. What would Mr. Winsor, or Mr. Cutter, or Mr. Noyes, or Mr. Poole, what would Dr. Cogswell himself, say to such cataloguing as this?

"The public have no idea how completely books are buried in a great library without the right sort of a catalogue. But the effects of the wretched system, or want of system, which has prevailed at the Astor Library are plainly seen by all who frequent it. The number of readers in three years has decreased about 7,500. The number of alcove readers has increased over 800, and it is probable that some of the readers, despairing of finding what they seek by trusting to the catalogue, have taken this course, while the majority have simply abandoned a seemingly hopeless task. If the blunders that are so numerous in the cards which are accessible to the public are to be perpetuated in the printed catalogue now being prepared, the work will be the laughing stock of all who examine it intelligently, and will afford some striking instances of carelessness, ignorance and stupidity."

In September following the Boston Transcript printed similar criticism, signed "Delta," and here taken from the reprint in the Library Journal, volume 6 (1881), pages 259-261.

"About the time Dr. Cogswell left the library a new idea originated in the brain of some librarian, and soon invaded all the libraries of the United States, in the form of an epidemic disease. The new idea was a 'card catalogue' that should do away with the need of any printing whatever in the form of library indexes. It is not necessary to describe a 'card catalogue,' since every frequenter of any library in the country in which it is in use knows to his sorrow exactly what it is, and that it has wasted more of his time in the invention of becoming epithets in its condemnation than he has given to the books consulted through its use. But the epidemic reached the Astor Library in its most virulent form, judging from the vast pile of worse than useless cards that form what is characterized as its 'subject catalogue.'

"These cards number from 30,000 to 50,000, alphabetically distributed under the names of authors of books through some 50 subjects. The cards seem to be duplicates of those in the 'Authors' Catalogue,' and as placed before the public for use are of no practical value whatever. Under the heading 'History of New York,' there are as many as 1,500 cards; 'British History,' 400; 'Jurisprudence,' 500; 'Oriental History,' 400; 'Industrial Arts,' 200; 'Inscriptions and Numismatics,' 200; 'Theology — Historical, Practical and Miscellaneous,' 1,800; 'Voyages and Travels,' 700; 'French Literature,' 1,200; 'American Literature,' 500.

"One may well inquire how, in a card catalogue, 1,200 cards could be found under 'French Literature.' On examination it is seen that all books in the French language of a general nature, as well as many on special subjects, are placed under this head. The 'Journal et lettres de Eugénie de Guérin,' 'Alfred le Grand, Pantomime en trois actes,' by M. Aumer; Le Sage's 'Gil Blas'; 'Human Sadness,' an English version of a book by the Countess de Gasparin; Lamartine's Memoirs, etc., are found under 'French Literature.' So, too, are certain works of Voltaire, the cards to which may be cited as illustrating the eccentric orthography prevailing in the card catalogue. One of them reads 'Voltaire F. M. Arrouet, de; Voltariana, ou Eloges Amphigouriques'; and another, 'Valtaire, F. M. Aronet De; A Philosophical Dictionary.'

“English literature is treated in the same comprehensive manner. Such works as Mrs. Grote’s ‘Personal Life of George Grote,’ may be found under that head, in common with ‘The Adventures of Sig. Sudentio di Lucca; Being the Substance of his Examination before the Fathers of the Inquisition at Bologna, in Italy; Giving an Account of an Unknown Country in the Deserts of Africa,’ and a great variety of other books with equal claims to such an entry.

“There is no end to the curiosities of classification to be found in the subject catalogue. ‘The Sutherlands,’ by the author of ‘Rutledge,’ may be looked for under the head of ‘American Literature’; Richard Hildreth’s ‘Lives of Judges Infamous as Tools of Tyrants,’ under ‘Jurisprudence’; Lloyd’s ‘Scandinavian Adventures during a Residence of Upwards of Twenty Years,’ under ‘Sports’; and ‘Bilder aus dem Schwedischen Volksleben’ (Pictures from Swedish Home Life) under ‘Scandinavian History’; Paul Lacroix’s ‘The XVIIIth Century, Its Institutions, Customs and Costumes,’ is relegated to the department of ‘Costumes,’ and Dieulafait’s ‘Diamants et Pierres Precieuses’ may be found under ‘General Science,’ while Lord’s ‘Historical Review of the New York & Erie Railroad’ is boldly classed under ‘Engineering.’ But the finest stroke in the way of original classification is the placing of a Chinese grammar — ‘The Rudiments of the Chinese Language, with Dialogues, Exercises and a Vocabulary,’ by Rev. James Summers — under ‘Oriental Philosophy.’ The cataloguer must be a kinsman of that ingenious person mentioned in the ‘Pickwick Papers,’ who constructed a learned article on Chinese metaphysics by reading up for metaphysics under the letter ‘M’ in the Encyclopædia Britannica, and for China under the letter ‘C,’ and combining the information.

“The same wholesale business which is exemplified under ‘French Literature’ is carried on under other general headings, and is indicative of the chaos into which one falls who attempts to find what he wants in the subject catalogue. And the catalogue is as far from being of practical use to the clerks as it is to the readers. Ask a clerk in the Astor Library to give you a good work on lime as a fertilizer, and he requests you to look under ‘Chemistry,’ find your book and bring a note of its place in the library. After wading through a multitude of cards, you report that no book on that subject can be found. The clerk suggests ‘Agriculture,’ and you go back to your task of hunting for the book. Patience and perseverance are rewarded, sometimes, with success; but more time has been consumed in finding the needed volume than is necessary in reading it. During as many as ten years this kind of work has been going on in the Astor Library, for the reason that the trustees were assured that no printed catalogue would ever be necessary if this ‘card catalogue’ were permitted to be constructed.

“Aside from the fatal defect of accumulating a vast number of books under a single general heading, thousands of these cards seem to have been made by persons totally incompetent to do such work. There is no evidence of scholarship in any of them. Hundreds of names of authors have from two to four different forms. No effort has been made to discover the authors of anonymous books, and many books whose authors are already well known are catalogued as anonymous. Books whose authors are plainly indicated in the title page are often catalogued under the subject of the book, and not under the name of the author. There is no end of confusion in these respects. There seems to have been no pride taken in keeping the bibliographical work up to the high standard exemplified in the catalogues of other large libraries. In fact, there is hardly a conceivable form of blunder that is not represented in this labyrinth of cards, this mighty maze without a plan.

"As a consequence the catalogue is not only in an unfit condition to print, but a much longer time will be necessary to put the cards in a proper shape for that purpose than would be required to catalogue the books anew, could they be separated from those that have been properly indexed by Dr. Cogswell's pen. I repeat that no proper work has been done upon the catalogue since the withdrawal of Dr. Cogswell. Soon after the four regular volumes a supplement of one volume was issued on every page of which are blunders of some kind or other. Coventry Patmore's poems 'The Betrothal,' 'The Espousals,' 'The Angel in the House,' for instance are set down not among the P's, but among the B's, thus, 'Browning, R. The Betrothed (sic), The Espousals, The Angel in the House.'

"The trustees have unquestionably done their full duty as far as the information furnished them enabled them to do so and funds sufficient for the expenditure required have always been forthcoming. To get the catalogue into its present chaotic condition is said to have cost some $14,000 — a sum sufficient to have kept the cards ready for publication at any time a vote of the trustees might have designated. The present deplorable condition of the catalogue can only be accounted for on the principles of general carelessness, indifference, and lack of all sense of the importance of correct, scholarly and accurate work in recording the titles of books.

"The usefulness of the Astor Library is greatly crippled from the lack of a proper catalogue. The library is unquestionably the most valuable in the United States, and I can conceive of nothing more important to those desiring to use it, than the completion of the catalogue in accordance with the plan of Dr. Cogswell, subject to such modifications as have been found to be desirable. No expenditure of money could be more appropriately made.

"But it is absolutely essential to the success of such a work that persons competent should be placed in absolute control of it."

In reprinting it the Library Journal made the following editorial comment (ibid. pages 255–256):

"The Astor Library has been added to the number of those to which the journalists are giving a mauvais quart d'heure. It has always been complained of for its unaccommodating hours, now it is laughed at for its inaccurate card catalogue. We do not know what truth there is in the charge. It may be that injustice is done. No catalogue is without mistakes. In the best it is very easy to pick out blunders, and to give the impression that these errors are fair samples of the whole work. But it may also be that the indictment can be sustained. That would not be surprising to one who considers the direction in which the catalogue started. Dr. Cogswell said in the preface to the four volumes issued in 1861: 'Bibliographical quiddling has been carefully eschewed.' He did not explain what the phrase 'bibliographical quiddling' meant to him; but the expression was an unfortunate one. It betrayed a dangerous state of mind for a cataloguer. It showed that he had aimed low; and we must say that his arrow fell short. His published catalogue is not worthy of a large library. Even the author part — far the easiest to make — left much to be desired; and the subject portion is surpassed in this country by only one other index in its successful showing of how not to do such work. We have always understood that this index, though published five years after Dr. Cogswell resigned, was prepared according to his ideas. The writer in the Transcript implies that some change was made for the worse in the original plan. This certainly is not unlikely. If Dr. Cogswell, whose child the library was, aimed low, of course his less enthusiastic and devoted successors would aim lower still.

"There may have been a reason for the inadequacy of the catalogue's plan. Dr. Cogswell was justly proud of the cheap rate at which he purchased valuable books in Europe. The circumstances of a revolutionary time favored him, to be sure; but his great knowledge of books was of the utmost importance in preventing his being led by low prices into purchasing rubbish. He naturally would have liked to acquire a similar reputation for accomplishing much with little means in another field. But it is somewhat unsafe to try to save money in a catalogue. This is one of the cases in which, unless the purchaser has an exceptional knowledge of the goods, he is apt to find out after a time that his cheap bargain is a remarkably dear one. In cataloguing, as in engineering and building, it is possible to waste money by unnecessary solidity and luxurious ornament; but it is unequally extravagant to scrimp and employ cheap incompetency. The stockholders of our mutual insurance companies fret over the money lying idle in some of those costly palaces called home offices; but they are not worse off than the stockholders of our railroads when they see their bridges, built with too great economy of materials or work, giving way under heavy trains or before violent storms. Of these opposite faults, the Astor, so far in its history, seems to have chosen the latter. People complain that when we found a university in America we erect a magnificent pile of buildings, and then have little left to pay the teachers; and it has been said that it is easier to raise money for a new building than a new professorship. The material carries the day over the intellectual. Has anything like this ever happened at the Astor? That library is very well lodged. Probably the erection of its three successive houses was overseen by a regularly educated architect with some experience. One would like to know whether the same precaution was taken with regard to building up the catalogue; whether the persons into whose charge it has from time to time been put, were selected because they had ever studied or practised the art, or whether the trustees proceeded on the common assumption that any person who can write a not utterly illegible hand can write a catalogue card and that any literary person can tell him how to write it and can revise his work. The fact is that cataloguing requires, besides a certain amount of foresight and common (that is uncommon) sense, considerable technical knowledge which is not to be found, as Alderman O'Brien said the qualifications of a librarian were to be found, 'in the first man you meet on the street.'

"Another mistake we suspect to have been that Dr. Cogswell — an indefatigable worker — attempted to do everything himself, and never appreciated the gain that comes from training assistants till they are able to do all the hand and much of the head work themselves, and leave their trainer at leisure to attempt more and labor on a higher level. If our conjecture is right, Dr. Cogswell would, as a natural result, when he resigned, have left no one at the library who was able to continue his work except in a deplorably inferior manner."

Aside from work on the new catalogue the fifteen years following 1880 present little of more than ordinary interest. There was a steady but uneven growth of resources as signified by the number of volumes on the shelves, an increase from 193,308 in 1880 to 227,652 in 1885, to 248,856 in 1890, and to 294,325 at the end of 1895. Purchases reached their low level in 1888 when 876 volumes were bought, and their high level in 1894 when 6,886 volumes were bought; the sums spent for books and binding being $6,245.06 and $24,074 respectively. Appreciation of the library as shown by statistics of readers grew slowly but steadily, the average number for the decade 1880–1889 being 59,000 readers per year, and for the next six years rising to 70,000. About the same result is indicated by the figures of volumes consulted, the number rising from 146,136 in 1880 to 167,584 in 1890 and to 225,477 in 1895.

During 1880 the hour for opening was fixed at 9 a. m., and for closing at 5 p. m. except during the short days of the winter months when closing took place at 4 or 4.30 p. m.

A characteristic though not wholly fair expression of the public feeling and attitude towards the library was given in the Critic of April 22, 1882, as follows:

"The Astor Library is a failure. . . We should have been grateful to the Messrs. Astor for letting this monument they have built themselves take its present form, were it not that the shadow they have given stands in the way of our ever getting the substantial thing. While the so-called Astor Library continues to exist and to grow in superficial area and the number of its hoarded volumes, the state will not give us what we need. The legislator at Albany will point to the ponderous and drowsy building in Lafayette Place and say: 'Here is a library on which hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent. It is so many feet long, so many wide, so many high. It contains so many bound volumes and so many pamphlets and manuscripts. It is open daily (except Sundays), and it is guarded by a liveried janitor who checks your umbrella in the reverberant hallway and chases the noisy small boy from the door.' All of which is indisputably true. But what we want is not a spacious building and a liveried janitor, but a library that contains the best new books; that is provided with an adequate corps of clerks and messengers; that is open daily including Sundays; that remains open longer, if anything, on Saturday than on the other days of the week; that does not close earlier in the summer than in the winter months — a library in short, such as the Astor might have been, had it not fallen into the hands of directors who lack even the vaguest notion of what a library should be. Let the Astor be what it was designed to be (if its founder's sole object was not to build a family monument), or let it stand out of the way."

The obvious answer was, of course, that the Astor was then what its conception designed it to be — a reference library and not a popular one, a collection for the student, the literary worker — that its stores had been consistently gathered in furtherance of well considered plans; that it was administered as the conscientious men in charge felt such a collection should be administered. Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles; or do men tend vineyards and fig orchards as thorn lands or thistle patches? New York wanted a library filled with the books which might be suggested by the first man one met on the street, wanted somebody — anybody, but itself — to present such a library, in return for which the donor would gladly be proclaimed a "philanthropist" — until somebody thought of a book he failed to find there, when "philanthropy" would be changed to "advertisement." The legislators at Albany had ready at hand an opportunity to permit the city to provide the kind of library it wanted: the Astor stood in no one's way. But the city preferred to let a few sewing class teachers start and support such a library from their own funds. Not until the New York Free Circulating Library had paid its own way for seven long years, full of care and anxiety, did the city take its first step towards self respecting recognition and support of such an instrument for good by making the enormous appropriation of $10,000.

Conservative the Astor management certainly was, but it was the conservatism of a trust conferred. Probably the indictment most frequently registered against it was the indictment of early closing and late opening. The opening hour was moved forward from 10 a. m. to 9 in 1880; the closing hour must perforce in those days be regulated by sunset, for gas meant increased fire hazards. Opening at night, to be sure, did not necessarily mean opening the whole building, and the plan proposed in the following extract from the Library Journal (May, 1884, volume 9, pages 83-84) certainly bears on its face unanswerable arguments for a trial at least. It is a question, however, whether it would have paid in 1880; its success was by no means certain when tried a quarter century later by The New York Public Library with greatly increased facilities and reading population.

"A New York paper, relying on its imagination, has announced that the decision has at last been reached that the Astor Library is not to be opened in the evening. The chief reason is stated to be the expense. It would be necessary, we are told, to put in gas fittings or electric lighting apparatus and to employ a night staff of officers, an outlay which would largely diminish the funds now available for the purchase of books. We are glad to learn that the report is at least premature, and hope that it will never come to be true. Opening a library in the evening need not be so vast an enterprise as the reporter in question makes out, and this no doubt the trustees will see. If, indeed, the plan were to open the whole library, it would probably be very costly and certainly would not produce any good result at all proportionate to the expense. But a less expensive plan was suggested long ago in the Nation and elsewhere that would cost much less and yet accomplish about as much. It was that a single room should be kept open until 10 o'clock, in which students who had engaged books during the day, either by personal application or by postal card, could pursue their studies four hours longer than they now can in summer, and five or six hours longer than they can in winter. The plan is perfectly feasible, for it has been tried at other libraries. It has been found of advantage even in those that allow their books to be taken home. A fortiori then one would suppose it desirable for the Astor Library which strictly confines the use of its books within its own walls.

"It may be that there is no need of such additional accommodation. A library in another city some years ago was induced to open its doors on the legal holidays (not on Sunday). On the first holiday two persons came, and never since have more than five availed themselves of the privilege. Perhaps it would be so at the Astor Library in the evenings. Yet it is easy to imagine cases in which the closing of the library must work serious inconvenience. A professor in a country college has just time enough to make some investigation at the Astor during the short winter vacation by working day and night. He comes to New York and studies while it is light, but the library has no room for him in the evening, and will not allow him to take books to his hotel to finish his labors there. A Western literary man stops a day in New York on his way back from a New England watering-place to put the finishing touches on his book. With a few hours more he could get through all he wishes to do and take the night train home, but at six o'clock he is turned out, and is obliged to waste his evening and spend another day in the city to complete his investigations. Nor would the additional facilities be of benefit to strangers alone, of whom it might be said that the library is not for them, but for New Yorkers. City people also often are in a hurry with some book or magazine article which they wish to finish, some proof that must be corrected. In a city of a million inhabitants there must be many who are busy all day and yet would like to pursue in the evening some study which at present only the Astor Library could furnish them the means of doing. It may be that there are not enough to make it worth while for the library to put itself out to oblige them. Nobody can be sure that there are. But on the other hand the library cannot be sure till it has tried the experiment. And the experiment could be tried at the expense of a few tables and chairs, a few yard oil study lamps, a few pails of water, the additional pay for four hours a day of a porter and one attendant, and the wear and tear of a single room."

In these last fifteen years the record becomes mainly a narrative of individual book purchases and gifts, of changes in the board and staff.

During 1882 Messrs. Rutherford and Lord were compelled to resign on account of ill health, and William Waldorf Astor tendered his resignation on accepting the post of American Minister to Italy. In place of Mr. Rutherford, Stephen Van Rensselaer Cruger was chosen in 1882, and in 1883 George Lockhart Rives in place of Mr. Lord, and Robbins Little, superintendent of the library, in place of Mr. Astor.

Opening of the north hall forced a much needed reclassification and rearrangement of the books moved thither and of those left in the other two halls. During the period of building purchases fell off from 10,138 volumes in 1877 to 3,516 in 1878, 3,356 in 1879, 2,017 in 1880, and 1,572 in 1881. In March, 1882, Mr. John Jacob Astor placed at the disposal of the library $12,000 for books, which resulted in the addition of 3,376 volumes, particular attention being paid to filling important gaps in archæology, history, foreign jurisprudence, political economy, sanitary science, and electricity.

A further gift of $15,000 in March, 1883, from Mr. Astor, resulted in much needed additions in architecture, painting, music, French literature, law, medicine, theology. From him also came the fifteenth century manuscript on vellum of Leonardus de Aquisgrano's Graduale, written in large Gothic characters, with square musical notes, illuminated, with miniatures of sacred subjects, borders with figures of dignitaries and their coats of arms, birds, flowers, etc., bound in old Russia.

Another gift of $15,000 from Mr. Astor in March, 1884, together with about $5,000 from library funds, provided some 5,030 volumes as accessions in 1884. In addition, Mr. Astor gave ten manuscripts and early printed books of unusual interest: an Evangelistarium, a Carlovingian manuscript on vellum;

Wycliffe's New Testament on vellum, written about 1390; a Sarum Missal on vellum of about 1440; the Rationale Divinorum Officiorum of Durandus printed at Mainz by Fust and Schoeffer in 1459; a vellum copy of the Bible done by the same printers in 1462, the first dated Bible; the Complutensian Polyglott of 1514–1517; Tyndale's Pentateuch, printed at Marlborough in Hesse by Hans Luft in 1530; Coverdale's Bible, printed at Antwerp by Jacob Van Meteren in 1535; the Paris, 1558, Vulgate; the first edition of John Eliot's Indian Bible, printed at Cambridge in 1663–1661. In addition to these he gave the very important collection of Hardwicke papers, 140 volumes, transcripts and original manuscripts, brought together by Lord Hardwicke, Chancellor of Great Britain (1690–1764) and continued by his sons the second Earl and the Hon. Charles Yorke, comprising correspondence and other papers relating mainly to English history and the political relations of England with the Continent from the time of Elizabeth to the middle of the eighteenth century. From Mrs. Astor were received as gifts a collection of autographs including a characteristic letter of Frederick the Great, a Book of Hours ad usum tornorcensium, illuminated, on vellum, done probably at Doornik in the Low Countries in the thirteenth century, and a vellum Officium B. Virginis Mariæ (Impressum Lugduniensis Bonini de boninis dalmatini, 1499).

A fourth gift of $15,000 for books was made by Mr. Astor in February, 1885. In addition he gave three manuscript volumes of interest, formerly in the library of Pope Pius VI. who left them to his nephew, Count Braschi of Venice. The oldest, a copy of Hesiod's Ἔργα καὶ Ἠμέραι, written in minuscule characters of the thirteenth century, contained an introduction hitherto unknown explaining the mythology of the Greeks as a personification of the forces of nature; verses 1–274 were accompanied by an interlinear paraphrase in Attic Greek. A copy of Æsop's Fables, in Greek, was an excellent specimen of fourteenth century calligraphy (the Codex Vaticanus Æsop being of the fifteenth century), the body of each fable being written in black ink, the initial letter and the moral in red; three were in choliambics, the others in prose. Likewise belonging to the fourteenth century was a copy of Lucan's Pharsalia (to the middle of the ninth book) probably a transcript from a ninth century manuscript; the text proved to be remarkably free from abbreviations and was accompanied by valuable scholia and a sort of map of Thessalia. From S. G. W. Benjamin, sometime New York state librarian and American minister to Persia in 1883–1885, he secured two oriental manuscripts, the first containing two poems by Jami, the Leila and Mejnoon, and the Khosru and Shireen, work of the calligrapher Suftan Ali Meshedi of the year A. D. 1518 (A. H. 896), formerly in the library of the Mogul emperors at Delhi and bearing the stamp of Shah Akbâr and Shah Jehân; the second of date A. D. 1592 (A. H. 970), a commentary on the Koran (Tafsir i Koran) by Ghazi Beijsavi, in excellent condition, with many illuminated headings, the covers overlaid with different colored leather decorated with cut designs and gilded stampings.

In this same year, the president of the board, Alexander Hamilton, gave the original manuscript plan of his grandfather, Alexander Hamilton, for a constitution for the United States, submitted to the constitutional convention at Philadelphia, June 18, 1787.

During 1887 Mr. Rives resigned from the board, having accepted the position of assistant secretary of state at Washington. No action was taken to fill the vacancy until the year following, when Stephen Henry Olin was chosen in his place.

On December 30, 1889, Alexander Hamilton, president of the board, died at his home near Irvington-on-Hudson after a short illness. He was the third president, having served since the death of William B. Astor in 1876. Hamilton Fish, ranking member of the board — after Mr. Astor — was chosen to succeed him as president, but on account of his advanced age and feeble health refused to accept the office, consenting, however, to serve temporarily as acting president. At his earnest request he was relieved from this duty after nearly two years' service, and on November 11, 1891, Dr. Markoe, next to him in length of service, was chosen to the office, which he held until the consolidation.

Printing of the catalogue was finished in 1888, as has been stated before. Mr. Nelson, who had been engaged on it since 1881, left in 1888 to accept the position of librarian of the Howard Memorial Library at New Orleans.

With relief from the pressure of this catalogue work came opportunity for much needed reclassification. About one-half of the department of science and the greater part of American history were reclassified, shelf marks changed in the books themselves and in the catalogues. The divisions between the four general groups of art and literature, history, science, and philosophy were made more clear by shifting whole sections, in block, from one hall to another, without attempting to change location marks of individual volumes.

John Jacob Astor, son of William B. and grandson of John Jacob Astor, died at his home in New York City on February 22, 1890, having served as trustee since 1858 and as treasurer since 1868. When he became a trustee the middle hall of the Library was unfinished, the number of volumes on the shelves was 110,000, the number of readers was about 15,000 per annum, and the number of volumes consulted by them was about 30,000. At the time of his death a third hall had been added by him, a monumental catalogue had been issued at his expense, the number of volumes on the shelves had increased to 235,101, of readers to 62,778 per annum, and the number of volumes consulted by them to 167,584.

By his will four hundred thousand dollars was left to the library, the income of which was to be used for purchase and binding of books; and further the sum of fifty thousand dollars, the net income to furnish attendance fees for members of the board of trustees — a use to which it was never put, the board voting its application to the general purposes of the library.

At the meeting on March 12, 1890, William Waldorf Astor was elected to fill the vacancy on the board caused by his father's death. He declined to serve, however, for reasons personal to himself. Such a step of course brought out various newspaper criticisms, assertions that he had shirked an obvious duty, that he had no interest in the welfare of the library, etc. A more reasonable explanation of the step was that instead of shrinking from a duty or viewing the library with indifference, he felt unwilling to have it considered a "family appendage," felt that though founded by John Jacob Astor and largely supported by two following generations of the family, it was a public institution and that public support would be withheld as long as an Astor name was prominently connected with it. (New York Times, quoted in Library Journal, January, 1892, volume 17, page 32.)

Mr. Edward King was chosen to the vacancy, and was elected Treasurer on May 14 following. In place of Alexander Hamilton was chosen Charles Howland Russell on December 10, 1890. The death on September 7, 1893, of Hamilton Fish, who had served as trustee since 1863, was filled by election of Philip Schuyler in 1894. No other changes in the board took place, leaving the members at the time of consolidation ranking as follows in order of seniority: Messrs. Markoe, Drisler, Cadwalader, Potter, Cruger, Little, Olin, King, Russell, Schuyler.

The story of the library in these later years becomes little more than a record of reclassification in various groups on the shelves, of purchases and gifts.

The end had come for the Astor Library. It had been an important factor in the intellectual life of New York and its influence had not been confined to the political or physical boundaries of the city. There were few scholars or investigators in the latter half of the nineteenth century who had not at some time used its collections. It had been conceived in the mind of a scholar and book lover, and its growth and development followed closely the policies he had planned and prepared. As we see them now they were Old-World policies, solid, circumscribed, traditional. They lacked the vision of a democratizing, popular library; they failed to move with the development of the American public library, one of the most amazing phenomena in the intellectual development of this country in the latter part of the nineteenth century. The popular library — a library for the people — and the scholar's library — a library for the student — seemed to belong to two irreconcilable categories. In our day we have come to see that the two may exist in peace and quiet under the same roof. But it was not so obvious a generation ago.

The Astor library lost its position as the foremost library in the country, not because the quality of its collections was lowered, but because its unchanged attitude kept it out of the main current of American library progress. It might have continued for another fifty or sixty years much as in its first forty years, and its usefulness would not have been greatly decreased. It would still have been a haven for students of history, the humanities, the classics, and it would have been assured of a life of honor and of fame. But its usefulness would not have increased. The intellectual life of the generations that followed its middle years turned to other questions, other problems, and demanded other sources. A radical change in attitude was necessary for the best development of its material and the best cultivation of its resources.

It suffered from its name. There was, as a matter of fact, no proprietorship, no question of family fiefdom or apanage. It was a free public library. But the public, though free to criticize, was reluctant to contribute towards its support. That was left to a single family.

The resources of the library were insufficient to meet half the demands on it in additions of books, more efficient service, or better physical accommodations. Unless its funds were materially increased its opportunities for growth were stunted if not killed. This enlargement of resources would come much better from a widened public interest and support than from a further appeal to the purse strings of the family which had founded the library and had supported it so liberally and unselfishly for nearly half a century.

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Cain, William. Earth pressure, retaining walls and bins. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. x, 287 p. illus. tables. 8°. VDF

The author, who is professor of mathematics in the University of North Carolina, gives full consideration to earth coherency, developing a complete graphical method, and experimentally verifying the Coulomb theory. He also discusses graphical and analytical methods as applied to non-coherent earth. Chapter six relates to the theory of bins, and appendix one covers stresses in wedge-shaped reinforced concrete bins.

Eccles, William Henry. Wireless telegraphy and telephony: a handbook of formulae, data and information. London: The Electrician Prtg. and Pub. Co., Ltd. [1915.] xx, 418 p., 1 diagr., 1 table. illus. 8°. TTF

"Dr. Eccles gives in this useful book a classified collection of information, data, formulae and tables likely to be helpful to designers and investigators in radio-telegraphy. From a practical standpoint the volume is one of the best we have seen. It gives in concise form not only a live statement of observed and recorded facts, but also brief accounts of the position of modern thought and speculation. Much of the information appeared originally in the columns of our contemporary the Electrician... Altogether the volume constitutes a remarkably good handbook of formulae, data and information." — Engineer, May 5, 1916, p. 381.

Jank, Joseph K. Spices: their botanical origin, their chemical composition, their commercial use. Seeds, herbs, leaves, etc.: their botanical origin, their commercial use. Miscellaneous: technical advices and tables. St. Louis: C. P. Curran Prtg. Co., printers, 1915. 132 p. tables. 8°. VTB

Stated to be a handbook for manufacturers who cannot afford expensive laboratory work, for food chemists who in many cases cannot secure reliable data on the botanical origin of articles passing their laboratories, and to serve as a valuable guide for brokers and salesmen. In addition to the subjects mentioned in the title there are to be found in condensed form, the federal standards, cost figuring, analysis of profits, federal and state labeling laws, buying and selling rules of the American Spice Trade Association, the new tariff so far as the spice trade is concerned, and a combined table of the official freight classification and import duty on all articles of interest to the trade.

Jennings, Arthur Seymour. Paint & colour mixing. A practical handbook for painters, decorators, paint manufacturers, artists, and all who have to mix colours. Containing over 300 samples of actual oil- and water-paints and water-colours of various colours, and upwards of 1,500 different colour mixtures... London: E. & F. N. Spon, Ltd., 1915. x, 245 p., 17 pl. illus. 5. ed. 8°. VOP

The fifth edition of this practical work (first published in 1902) represents thorough revision and important additions, including new chapters on mixing and matching colours, straining colours, putty hard stopping, knife and brush filling, two hundred standardized colours, and colour nomenclature. Considerable additional space has also been given to paint and colour mixing machinery.

Reviewed in The Engineer, May 5, 1916, p. 381; in National builder, June, 1916, p. 83; in Journal of the Royal Society of Arts, Feb. 4, 1916, p. 241; in Building age, June, 1916, p. 76.

Robinson, Ernest Franklin. Military preparedness and the engineer. New York: Clark Book Co., 1916. 1 p.l., vii-xvi, 224 p., 1 pl. 16°. VWI

A timely and valuable book by a captain in the Corps of Engineers, New York National Guard—being a revision and enlargement of lectures delivered before various engineering societies. While by no means a service manual, it is based to a considerable degree upon official instruction and endeavors to give "as accurate an idea as possible of the opportunities and limitations that will confront the civilian engineer in the event of war, to show him what he can do to assist in preparedness against invasion and how he must go about the matter." Tells how to obtain a military training, describes the National Guard, military organization and administration, the duties of engineer troops in the field, fire action, field fortifications, obstacles, siege works, demolitions, military bridges, topographical sketching, and the needs of engineers in war. Provided with excellent illustrations, a list of appropriate reading matter, and a list of engineering property carried by a company of engineers in the field.

Schaefer, Franz, and others. Das Gas als Wärmequelle und Triebkraft... München: R. Oldenbourg, 1916. vi, 249 p. illus. 4°. (Handbuch der Gastechnik. Bd. 8.) †VOL well as a number of full-page plates. Chapter eight is a digest of the code of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

This richly illustrated volume of 249 pages represents the German practice in the use of gas as a source of heat and power. The first section, by Franz Schaefer, traces the history of the art, gives interesting statistics, and states the requirements for burners. Director Spaleck of Dessau presents the section on water heaters and gas hearths, with historical references. Section three on the application of gas heat to food preparation and to washing and ironing is from the pen of Herr Albrecht and gives, among many instructive data, some comparisons between the economies of gas and electricity. Section four, also by Schaefer, treats of the industrial applications, giving illustrations of a large variety of apparatus. The fifth section, by the well known Johannes Körting of Düsseldorf, has to do with gas motors and the comparative costs of gas and electricity; while the sixth section, by Sander, presents the present state of the art of the manufacture and use of the different gases for balloons.

There are copious bibliographies both as footnotes and as chapter endings.

Seaton, Roy Andrew. Concrete construction for rural communities. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. xi, 223 p. illus. tables. 8°. (Agricultural engineering series.) VEOM

"While largely made up of simplified abstracts of data from various sources, there is included in addition to descriptions of the materials (cements and limes, with specifications and aggregates) a fairly technical consideration of plain and reinforced concrete. The distinctive parts of the book, however are contained in part 5, treating the typical applications of concrete. These are presented by good illustrations and by tabular data helpful in designing such objects as sidewalks, floors (barn and feeding floors), roads, tanks, cisterns and silos and small bridges and culverts. The chapter treating the methods of casting in molds is complete and useful, and contains several practical suggestions for the solution of rural engineering problems.

"The book will doubtless find a real demand awaiting it, as there is evidence of a widespread tendency towards more substantial and permanent construction in small buildings and rural structures, of which there are millions scattered over the country. The typography and illustrations are fully equal to the highest standards for such text books." — Engineering record, June 24, 1916, p. 841.

Winton, Andrew Lincoln. The microscopy of vegetable foods, with special reference to the detection of adulteration and the diagnosis of mixtures, by Andrew L. Winton...with the collaboration of Dr. Josef Moeller...and Kate Barber Winton... New York: J. Wiley & Sons, Inc., 1916. xiv, 701 p. illus. 2. ed. 8°. VTD

Author was formerly chief of the United States Food and Drug Laboratory at Chicago, the work representing original work so far as possible, although credit is given to Dr. Josef Moeller of Vienna, and others, for contributions to text and illustration. A consideration of laboratory equipment, methods, and general principles is followed by sections on the histology and diagnosis of grains, oil seeds and oil cake, legumes, nuts, fruit and fruit products, vegetables, alkaloids, spices and condiments, and commercial starches. This, the second edition, embraces additions to the sections on wheat and flour, a complete revision of such parts of the chapter on oil seeds as treat of mustards, rapes, cruciferous weed seeds, and linseed, a description of the histology of alfalfa with distinctions from red and alsike clover, a revision of the sections on pomes and drupes with practical hints on the examination of almond pastes, jams, preserves and other fruit products, and rewritten descriptions of the cucurbitaceous fruits used as foods and adulterants. Has an excellent general, as well as several special, bibliographies.

The following list represents the most recent accessions in the field of sculpture in its broadest sense. Short as it is, it indicates the wide variety in processes and materials, in national and individual impulses, implied by the term "plastic art." To mention but two other specialties not brought out in the titles here given: conditions abroad are bound to bring the matter of soldiers' memorials to an acute point, and the interest in city planning has brought queries to our library for public fountains. That, again, emphasises the very important question of the relation of sculpture to architecture.

The Library aims to give information on all phases of the subject, and thus serve the sculptor, the architect, those engaged in city planning and landscape gardening, the student of art history and archaeology, the interior decorator, the numismatist, and many others besides.

PART III

Biographical facts about James Lenox are quickly stated. He was born in New York City on August 19, 1800, the son of Robert Lenox,<sup>1</sup> who came to this country from Scotland and grew wealthy as a general merchant. The son was graduated from Columbia in 1818, received his master's degree from Columbia and from Princeton in 1821, studied law and was admitted to the bar, spent some time in Europe, returned to help his father in the business. The firm was engaged in importing, Robert Lenox and Son succeeding Robert Lenox, Merchant, in 1829. After the father's death the son carried on the business until 1845, when he retired to the residence at 53 Fifth Avenue, northeast corner of Twelfth Street, and there gave his attention to his estate, to collecting books and objects of art, and to an extensive but unobtrusive participation in the charitable and religious work of the city. Like his father he was a trustee of the College of New Jersey, as Princeton was then called, serving from 1833 until his resignation in 1857. He was a trustee of Princeton Seminary from 1831 till 1879 and a director of the Seminary from 1835 till 1847. He received the degree of LL.D. from Princeton (1867) and Columbia (1875). In 1870 the Lenox Library was incorporated and through it he gave to his birthplace his books and art treasures. He died on February 17, 1880, unmarried, the only surviving son in a family of twelve. "A purer, cleaner, and more finished life it is hardly possible to conceive."

He was of a retiring disposition, feeling that he was by no means a public man and that the public had no interest in him or his life. Of printed matter about James Lenox the man, the most extensive and best known account is the "Recollections of Mr James Lenox of New York and the formation of his library. By Henry Stevens of Vermont."<sup>1</sup> Stevens was closely connected with him as agent for his book purchases for more than a quarter of a century after 1845, and from the "Recollections," is condensed most of the following characterization:

He was a man of few words and few intimate friends, but of varied information, much studious reading, extensive correspondence, and many books. By some he was thought proud, aristocratic, distant, and haughty; but "to me, who was in constant communication with him for more than a quarter of a century prior to the founding by charter of the Lenox Library, he always appeared diffident (almost bashful), simple-hearted, generous, kind, very pious, very retiring and very close-mouthed to outsiders, but as communicative as a child to his intimates; and especially to those in sympathy with his projects and pursuits. With all his amiable qualities none knew his duties better, and knowing them, none dared maintain them more firmly and consistently than he."

As a book collector he was original and peculiar, but nothing could exceed his promptitude, punctuality, energy, exactness, frankness, truthfulness, simplicity, and courtesy. He was painfully just and even exacting in having everything in which he participated done in his own way, and when he found himself mistaken, as he not infrequently did, he always owned up like a man. His love of exactness, or exact conformity to truth, was sometimes carried into inconvenient trifles. He tolerated no interviewers or curiosity hunters, and his own door was seldom opened to visitors except by appointment. He was himself not easily accessible except for good cause, but the treasures of his library, however precious, were generally with great promptness and courtesy submitted to the use of scholars on due and satisfactory application, but seldom at his own house; nor was he (with rare exceptions) willing to lend his rare books or let them go out of his possession. His frequent practice was to deposit his rarities, when asked for, in the hands of the librarian of the Astor Library, or some similar place of safety, and then by note inform the applicant that the use of the particular book required was at his service there.

THE LENOX FAMILY RECORD

“Mr Lenox excelled all men I ever knew for seizing ideas and perseveringly running them out to the end. He possessed an extraordinary aptitude for sticking to and finishing up any work he had in hand. This, however, I fancy, was one of the virtues that was not in all cases its own reward. His first absorbing penchant was for collecting early editions of the Bible and parts thereof in all languages. Then he took to books relating to North and South America, including all the great collections of voyages and travels, as well as the prior or original editions of which they were composed. This soon led to collecting everything pertaining to the great ‘Age of Discovery,’ whether in Spanish, Portuguese, English, French, Dutch, Italian or German. . .

“Besides these he took very early to his favourite author John Bunyan, and not only edited<sup>1</sup> an edition of the ‘Pilgrim’s Progress,’ but undertook to collect all editions and translations of it. In this he was particularly successful, having eventually acquired nearly every one of the early English editions of parts I, II, and III, as numbered from the 1st to the 32nd. No collection known can be compared with his, that of the late Mr Offor<sup>2</sup> being in no way equal to it. Indeed for nearly twenty years I carried in my pocket lists of the editions of the P. P. he had, as well as those known ones he wanted, and in that way catered earnestly, allowing nothing to slip through my fingers that it was necessary to secure for him. In reading catalogues and reports from all parts of the world, one eye at least was always kept peeled for his desiderata.

“In the same manner he undertook to bring into his net all the editions of Milton, and succeeded in acquiring, it is believed, nearly all the known editions, as well as many not previously recognized, of the early separate pieces in both prose and verse of the author of ‘Areopagitica’ and ‘Paradise Lost.’ Indeed his collection of Miltons excels that of the British Museum and that of the Bodleian put together, rich as those libraries are in Miltons.”

Stevens says that for the fifteen years following 1845, letters, lists, invoices, notes passed between them by almost every steamer; he estimated that in 1854 and 1855 he bought for his New York principal more than fifty thousand dollars worth. "During the war <sup>1</sup> Mr Lenox suspended generally his ardent foraging for rare books, and only occasionally had an intermittent attack of his old bibliographical fever. Early in 1866, after I had sent him some extraordinary historical nuggets that he could not resist buying, he wrote me on Shakespeare's birth and death day, April 23, a long letter, in which was contained this announcement: 'Your best plan, as far as I am concerned, will be to let me have a memorandum beforehand of what you suppose I may take, and I will let you know immediately what you shall forward to me. In fact, unless it be some volume like the Vesputius, or De Bry, or Hulsius, or Jesuit Relation, I have almost made up my mind to stop purchasing.' Such hints between 1865 and 1875 I not infrequently had from him in his numerous letters on bibliographical subjects, while sometimes an amusing commentary on these incipient resolutions was found in a postscript, in which he inquired anxiously for some nugget that he had passed or missed when under his eye, but now desired me to re-offer or procure for him."

"From about 1845 to 1869 Mr Lenox was actively collecting his library so rapidly, and doing all the work himself, that he had no time to catalogue or arrange his accessions, except a few of the smaller and tidier nuggets which he could put away in the few book cases in his gallery of art which was also being filled at the same time with paintings and sculpture. The great bulk of his book collections was piled away in the numerous spare rooms of his large house, till they were filled to the ceiling from the further end back to the door, which was then locked and the room for the present done with. The accessions after examination and careful collation, approval and payment, were entered or ticked off in interleaved catalogues of Ternaux-Compans, Rich, Ebert, Hain, Lea Wilson, Ofor and others, or in small and special memorandum books, with sufficient clearness for his own use but unintelligible to outsiders. The books were then piled away like cord wood."

The Lenox Library was incorporated by act of legislature of New York passed January 20, 1870, the trustees named in the act being nine in number, as follows: James Lenox, William H. Aspinwall, Hamilton Fish, Robert Ray, Alexander Van Rensselaer, Daniel Huntington, John Fisher Sheafe, James Donaldson, Aaron Betts Belknap.

Aspinwall, the foremost of New York merchants in the India and Pacific trade, was at this time sixty-three years old. Hamilton Fish, governor of the State, Senator, trustee of the Astor Library since 1863, was, in 1870, secretary of state in Grant's cabinet. Daniel Huntington, then at the height of his fame as an artist, had served as president of the National Academy of Design from 1862 to 1869; he alone of the original Lenox trustees was destined to serve on the larger board of The New York Public Library. The other trustees were New York professional or business men, friends of Mr. Lenox, or family connections.

(The Book Collector)

Organization of the board was effected on January 28, 1870, when the trustees declared their acceptance of the act of incorporation, chose James Lenox president, Belknap secretary, and requested the president to act as treasurer until another might be appointed.

At their meeting on March 15 following, they received from Mr. Lenox $300,000 in 6 per cent. stock of the county of New York, and in bonds and mortgages on New York City real estate bearing 7 per cent. interest; of this sum, on April 17, they set aside $100,000 of the city stock towards a permanent fund, and appointed the remainder a building fund. On this same day they formally accepted the deed, dated March 17, conveying to them the eight lots forming the Fifth Avenue block between 70th and 71st Streets and two others running across their rear.

For the library building Richard Morris Hunt was chosen architect. Work on it began at once, the first annual report of the trustees stating that excavation was in progress. The foundation had been laid by May, 1871, and at the end of that year the building had risen to the top of the first story. A structure 192 feet long, 114 feet deep, 101 feet high was called for by the plans, two halls parallel to the side streets being joined by a passage-way set back from the street, the recess thus formed being 92 feet long by 42 feet deep.

To meet demands upon the building fund in 1871 Mr. Lenox gave an additional $100,000, which relieved the trustees of the necessity of selling the stock set aside for the fund; $36,000 of this went for the building and $64,000 to the permanent fund, $64,000 in New York stock being transferred to the permanent fund.

During 1872 the walls of the north wing were completed and the iron frame work of its roof erected; the south wing progressed nearly as far, and the walls of the centre were carried up to the level of the cornice on the wings.

A gift of books from Felix Astoin, a wholesale liquor dealer of the city, tendered June 3, 1872, was of importance not only for the intrinsic value of the collection but also for the intimation of public interest in the library. In the words of the donor it was a collection made "during a long residence in this city, embracing about 5,000 volumes, all bound and in an excellent state of preservation, of French books, including the best encyclopedias, works of art, and on history, classics, etc., and probably the most complete collection of writings on French bibliography that can be found in the country." The collection remained in Mr. Astoin's possession until after his death in 1884.

On October 3, 1872, Dr. George Henry Moore was elected a trustee in place of James Donaldson who had died on June 4, and was appointed superintendent on the same date. He had been assistant librarian and librarian of the New York Historical Society since 1841, and he brought to the service of the library a knowledge of American historical literature equalled by few, if any, of his contemporaries.

During 1873 the exterior walls of the building were finished, as well as the massive fence before the court and the principal interior stairways. The roof, too, of iron covered with slate laid in cement fastened with copper wires, was completed, and this, with temporary doors and windows, and weather boarding for the larger openings, allowed the building to be completely enclosed; it also hastened work on the interior. The floor arches, in iron and brick were turned throughout, iron work for the ceilings completed, and the greater part was ready for plastering in the spring of 1874.

The next two years saw the building practically completed. By the end of 1876 the greater part of Mr. Lenox's books, paintings, and statuary had been transferred, but of these three groups the latter two only were sufficiently well arranged to permit public exhibition. On Monday, January 15, 1877, the rooms containing them were thrown open for public inspection. Exhibition continued on Mondays and Thursdays until March and on Mondays and Fridays through June. Continued occupation of the building by mechanics and workmen delayed re-opening until December 1, when an additional room was set aside for exhibition of certain of the rarer books and manuscripts. A system of admission by tickets was adopted, admission cards being forwarded by post to persons applying in writing; during the year 15,000 persons were so admitted.

Concrete evidence of the progress in arrangement and classification of the books was shown by the issue in 1877 of the first of a series of "Contributions to a Catalogue of the Lenox Library," in the shape of a thorough and careful collation of the different editions of the Voyages of Hulsius and of other Hulsiana.

In April, 1878, fifty-nine pieces of paintings on porcelain, enamels, mosaics, etc., were transferred from the Lenox residence, the exhibition being opened to the public in May. At the November meeting of the trustees

Dr. Moore announced the gift of the Duyckinck collection, the library of Evert Augustus Duyckinck who had died in this city on August 13 preceding. Mr. Duyckinck had told Dr. Moore of his intention to make the gift on May 21 of that year and had sent the first installment on the 29th following; this shipment included the long files of English literary and illustrated periodicals. His failing health and strength prevented further transfers before his death. From time to time during the next four years about half of the entire collection was transferred. By the will of Mrs. Duyckinck, who died February 20, 1890, the remainder of the library was bequeathed as a memorial of her husband and his brother George Lang Duyckinck; after providing for sundry legacies and certain life-interests in the income to other beneficiaries, at the termination of the life-interest of one of these beneficiaries<sup>1</sup> the entire residuary estate of every kind was given to the trustees "for the benefit and support of the library and other objects for which said corporation was established."

All told, the collection comprised 15,164 volumes and 1,596 pamphlets, exclusive of the manuscripts, and related almost entirely to English and American literature. The Duyckincks belonged to a Dutch family long settled here and long connected with the literary life of the city; the father of the two brothers had been a printer, publisher, book dealer, since the eighteenth century. The brothers were men of wide reading and culture, compilers of the valuable Cyclopædia of American Literature, editors of Arcturus and of the Literary World, friends of every American and many English writers of note in the middle nineteenth century. The library was such a collection as such a family and such literary workers would bring together.

Two other gifts in 1878 are worthy of special mention; the admirable marble group of Lincoln freeing the Slave, executed in 1872 by Thomas Ball, and Munkácsy's Milton dictating "Paradise Lost" to his Daughters one of the successes of the Paris Exposition of that year; both were given by Robert Lenox Kennedy. The Munkácsy was hung in the following summer. To gratify public interest in it the library was opened for visitors to the art collection every week day in November and December from 11 a. m. to 4 p. m.; in these two months the number of visitors, admitted solely on application, amounted to 13,266.

Progress in the general catalogue was shown by the issue in 1879 of the second, third, and fourth sections of the "Contributions to a Catalogue," the records of the Jesuit Relations, the Thevenot Voyages, and the Bunyan collection.

On March 6, 1879, Dr. Samuel Austin Allibone, of Philadelphia, was appointed librarian, his services beginning May 1 following.

The first Brinley sale in this year gave opportunity for extensive purchases by Mr. Lenox to supplement and complete the Americana of the library. A noteworthy gift came from Robert C. Winthrop, of Boston, in the shape of autograph letters of John Eliot, Roger Williams, and the elder and younger Winthrops.

The death of Mr. Lenox on February 17, 1880, closed a life of quiet usefulness. At the meeting of the trustees on Thursday, April 1, the following memorial notice was adopted:

"James Lenox, the founder of the Lenox Library and first president of its board of trustees, died at his home in his native city of New York, on the 17th day of February, 1880, in the eightieth year of his age.

"His surviving associates in the board record this event with a personal sorrow that is only mitigated by their abiding sense of the completeness of his life, and the perfection of his life's work. Of the character and incidents of his career, his own invincible modesty has made it well nigh impossible to speak; but as his name will be honored through generations to come, history will carefully gather and preserve the memorials of his good works, among her choice examples of wisdom and virtue.

"Of gentle birth and life, his education was appropriate to his station and inheritance. It was enlarged by rare opportunities of foreign travel, with wide and manifold experience and observation of men and things. In every relation of life his influence was that of a thorough Christian gentleman, inspired by the sense of duty, and governed by the obligations of justice. Bred in the ancestral home school of absolute Christian faith, his whole life was devoted to the exercise of Christian charity, and his death was in the triumph of Christian hope.

"The visible monuments of his liberality, substantial and impressive as they are, undoubtedly bear small proportion to those widely scattered and generous benefactions which have made glad the hearts of many in many lands, as those silent tides of benevolence have quietly flowed into many waste and desert places, of whose meter and bounds there is no earthly record.

"This library is the lasting monument of his devotion to history, literature and art. Its rich collections are literally personal memorials of his loving and faithful labors in those perennial fields of noblest culture. It was the charm of his youth, the delight of his manhood, the comfort of his age; and, as he has given it his name, it will be the glory of his memory hereafter. Of all his public works, it is the noblest and most conspicuous which he has intrusted to our watchful care and guardianship. In its charter and establishment he has clearly indicated the principles which should govern its administration; and the fidelity with which his trusts continue to be secured and protected will prove the permanent measure of its value."

His place as president of the board was filled at the March meeting of the trustees by the election of his nephew Robert Lenox Kennedy, and his place as trustee was filled in April by election of Alexander Maitland, his grand-nephew. In this same year the trustees lost a valued associate by the death of Aaron Betts Belknap on June 4, in the sixty-fourth year of his age, at Keokuk, Iowa, while on his way home from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. He was one of the charter members of the board and had served as secretary from its organization in 1870 to January, 1876, and as treasurer from 1876 until his death. As treasurer he was succeeded by Alexander Maitland in October, 1880, his place on the board being filled by the election of Dr. James Lenox Banks, a nephew of James Lenox, in December following.

During 1880 the reading room in the south wing was thrown open to visitors for the exhibition of a further selection of rare books and manuscripts. As yet no books were available for consultation by readers, the report for this year stating that "as by far the greater portion of these treasures must always be for exhibition in general, rather than for absolute use by the multitude, attracted by curiosity to cursory inspection rather than critical examination, the trustees have a genuine pleasure in the confirmation which experience has furnished of the high estimate they have placed upon the educational value and important influence of these and similar exhibitions.

"At some future day, the information which is constantly, readily and cheerfully furnished to all visitors and inquirers may take a more definite, enlarged and permanent form in such discourses and readings on those objects of bibliography, literature, archæology and art, as are contemplated in the provisions of the charter referring to the public lectures to be delivered in connection with the Library."

Part V of the "Contributions," Dr. Allibone's catalogue of the Shakespeare collection, was issued in this year, and Part VI, the Milton catalogue, in 1881.

In this latter year the picture gallery received an important addition in the gift by the president of a contemporary portrait of Milton once owned by Charles Lamb who cherished it with peculiar and characteristic reverence and made it the subject of frequent allusions in his conversation and correspondence with his friends. This, with Mr. Lenox's copy of the portrait of the Protector, painted to order from the original by Sir Peter Lely in the Pitti Palace, Florence, and Munkácsy's Milton, made a valuable complement to the other material for a history of sixteenth- and seventeenth-century English life and thought in the Bunyan, Shakespeare, and Milton collections already in the library, and the Milton manuscripts presented in 1882 by Mr. Kennedy. These latter were contained in a single folio volume and included a long holograph letter of the poet, written in the spring of 1647 at Barbican, to his friend Carlo Dati of Florence, the draft of the latter's reply, and three receipts or releases bearing the mark and signatures of Milton's three daughters, Anne, Mary, and Deborah Clarke, on receiving each one hundred pounds from their stepmother, Elizabeth, as their portions of the estate of their father.

It was now over ten years since the library had been incorporated and there were no books available for consultation by the public. There was, of course, a certain amount of newspaper criticism of the policy of the institution, and in their twelfth annual report (for 1881) the trustees stated at some length their conception of the purposes and ideals of the library.

"The series of reports heretofore submitted to the Legislature by the trustees" — they go on to say — "has distinctly pointed out the general character of the collections which form the library intrusted to their care and direction, and a careful consideration and review of the details presented will indicate what may justly be expected from its due administration. The library differs entirely from most public libraries. It is not a general library, intended in its endowment and present equipment for the use of readers in all or most of the departments of human knowledge. Many of those departments are not represented at all, or if at all, in the most concise works of general reference, but with nothing like fullness and completeness in the apparatus necessary for thorough work by the student in those departments. Beyond its special collections it should be regarded as supplementary to others more general and numerous and directly adapted to popular use. It is not like the British museum, but rather like the Grenville collection in the British museum, or perhaps still more like the house and museum of Sir John Soane in Lincoln's Inn Fields, in London, both lasting monuments of the learning and liberality of their honored founders. Thus, while the library does not profess to be a general or universal collection of all the knowledge stored up in the world of books, it is absolutely without a peer or a rival here in the special collections to which the generous taste and liberal scholarship of its founder devoted his best gifts of intellectual ability and ample resources of fortune. It represents the favorite studies of a life-time consecrated, after due offices of religion and charity, to the choicest pursuits of literature and art.

"It would be difficult to estimate the value or importance of these marvellous treasures, whose exhibition, hitherto only in part, has challenged the admiration of all scholars and given a new impulse to those studies for which they furnish an apparatus before unseen in America.

"The world of books opens an infinite and endless range for the scholar, and the greatest libraries yet known in history represent parts only of the great divisions of human knowledge. . .

"The countless myriads of volumes produced in the past four centuries of printing with movable types, have left in all the libraries of all the nations comparatively few monuments or even memorials of so many eager, or patient, or weary generations of men whose works have followed them, when they have rested from their labors.

"The Lenox library was established for the public exhibition and scholarly use of some of the most rare and precious of such monuments and memorials of the typographic art and the historic past as have escaped the wreck and been preserved to this day. That exhibition and use must be governed by regulations which will insure to the fullest extent the security and preservation of the treasures intrusted to our care, in the enforcement of which the trustees anticipate the sympathy and co-operation of all scholars and men of letters, through whose use and labors alone the public at large must chiefly derive real and permanent benefits from this and all similar institutions."

By 1882, however, they were able to report that "Some use has also been made of the library by scholars and special students, under the immediate supervision of the Superintendent, in the furtherance of studies and researches for which the materials are not elsewhere to be found in this country," and also that "all the time at the command of the Superintendent and Librarian has been devoted to the preparation of the general catalogue of all the collections, which it is intended to complete as soon as possible. The printing of special contributions of minute and exhaustive bibliography has been interrupted on this account, although a considerable part of the labor thus bestowed upon the general catalogue will be available to some extent in the special works referred to." In the report for 1883 they continue: "The use of the library referred to in the last report has been continued. It will be hereafter enlarged and extended to promote research and provide for the public enjoyment of all the collections easily and gradually, without risk of interruption or failure in any part of the duty of those who are charged with their care and protection. Scholars and special students have already availed themselves of their opportunities in this direction, as the real character and value of the treasures here have become known to them. The proper functions of the library will thus be developed to the fulfilment of its best uses, and a satisfactory solution of all the problems of administration attained without danger of loss or injury, against which its directors are bound to guard, by the terms of their trust."

The following clever skit appeared in Life (January 17, 1884) as Lesson XVI in its "Popular Science Criticism" and serves well to indicate a very common attitude towards the library at that time.

THE LENOX LIBRARY

What is this?

This, dear, is the great Lenox Library.

What is it for?

Nobody knows.

But I thought you said it was a library?

So I did.

Then there must be books in it?

Perhaps.

Why is it called the "Lenox" Library?

Because it was founded and given by Mr. James Lenox.

Given to whom?

To the city of New York.

Oh! then it is a public library?

Yes, dear.

How delightful! Why it must be very useful to students and the reading public?

Very.

But why are the doors locked?

To keep people out.

But I thought you said it was a public library?

So I did.

Then how can they keep people out?

By locking the doors.

But why?

To keep the pretty books from being spoiled.

Why! who would spoil the pretty books?

The public.

How?

By reading them.

Gracious! What are all those brass things on the roof?

Cannon, dear.

What are they for?

To blow the heads off students who want to get in.

Why! and see those gallows!

Yes, dear.

696<sup>a</sup>

THE LENOX LIBRARY
As "Life" conceived it, January 17, 1884

Who are they?

Students who got in.

But is there no way of getting into the library without being shot or hanged?

How?

By writing an humble letter of application to the kind Lord High Librarian.

Well?

He will refer you to the 1st Assistant Inspector of Character.

And then?

It will go to the Third Deputy Examiner of Morals.

Next?

He will pass it on to the Comptroller of Ways and Means.

And he?

He will, after mature deliberation, send it to the Commercial Agency.

What for?

To get a proper understanding of the applicant's solvency.

Well?

Then it comes back for the monthly meeting of the Sub-Committee on Private Inquiry.

Why?

To ascertain if the applicant has any real necessity for consulting any particular book in the library.

And suppose he has?

Why, then the paper goes to the Sub-janitor.

And what does he do?

He finds out if the Astor or the Mercantile Libraries have the book.

And if they have?

He tells the applicant to go there and consult it.

But if they have it not?

Then the application goes to the Commissioner of Vital Statistics.

For what purpose?

To ascertain if the applicant is still living.

And if he is?

At the next annual meeting of the Board of Directors, if there is a quorum present, which sometimes happens, he will get a ticket entitling him to admission between the hours of two and three on a specified day.

But if the applicant is busy on that day at that hour?
He forfeits his ticket.

But how's the public benefited by this "public" library?
Ask the Trustees.

Clever, but superficial. Charles Ammi Cutter, then editing the Library Journal, was broad-minded enough to reprint the satire in the April issue of the Journal, and was wise enough to accompany it with the following comment:

"In another column we have copied from Life a clever skit on the Lenox Library. We hope none of our readers will suppose that we take it seriously. Every librarian knows that the Lenox Museum, as it should have been called, was not intended to be a free circulating library for the benefit of the poor of New York, nor even a library of reference for the literary man anxious to throw off a magazine article or a leader in some newspaper in the quickest possible time. The latter, we are now told, is the function of the Astor. The Lenox has not the books to perform these offices, it has not the money to pay the attendants that a public library in a great city needs, its situation is entirely unfit for any such purpose, and its books are still more unfit. Imagine its "Jesuit relations" circulating about Five Points, or its "Thévenot voyages" in the Chinese quarter. One might as well complain that the Zoölogical Museum does not give up its stuffed birds to furnish Christmas dinners to the poor, or that portolanos are not used to teach geography from in the public schools. The object which the New York Free Circulating Library proposes to itself is noble—none more so. No member of the American Library Association will despise the service of the people, or the service of those writers who serve the people. But there is another legitimate function of a library, the service of the scholar. The satisfactory accomplishment of this object demands that there shall be collected, in several places if necessary, but preferably in one, many rare and costly books, which because they cannot easily be replaced must be carefully preserved.

"In England this function is performed by the British Museum, but we have no British Museum, nor can we rely upon Congress to give us a national library. We have no one repository of books, where the scholar can go certain of finding much of the rarer literature on whatever subject he is led to investigate. He must run over a great country and find a book here and a book there. When, therefore, a library was given for his use which contained wonderfully rich collections of Bibles, of incunabula, of early voyages, and the like, works that are not wanted often, it may be, but are wanted very much when they are wanted at all,—a library which, not being intended to satisfy the desire for reading, did not circulate its books, and not being intended to gratify an idle curiosity, was not thrown open to every comer, and having unique treasures, was bound to preserve them scrupulously for posterity,—it was not creditable to the public, that, instead of being grateful for what was given, it should complain because it did not receive something else, and should now abuse the library for not being what it was never meant to be. We do not say that the museum is made as useful as it might be; we do not think that the best means are adopted for keeping out those who cannot profit by its treasures and admitting without unnecessary effort those who can. But we are anxious that the public should not, in its impatience at the clumsy regulations now enforced, forget its debt of gratitude for what it has already received, and also, to speak after the manner of Talleyrand, for what it may receive under a wiser management, which shall keep out the curious idler by some rule which shall not so much inconvenience the student." (Volume 9, page 60.)

During 1884, the Astoin books were transferred to the library; the gift, the first considerable contribution to the institution outside the circle of trustees, had been announced in 1872, but the books remained with their collector until after his death. They numbered 4,544 volumes and 137 pamphlets.

Transfers of Mr. Lenox's collection continued from time to time, the De Bry collection coming in 1884 and the manuscript of Washington's farewell address in 1885.

Robert Lenox Kennedy, second president of the board of trustees, died at sea on his way home from Europe, September 14, 1887; he was succeeded in office by John Stewart Kennedy on October 6 following, his place on the board being taken by H. Van Rensselaer Kennedy.

Miss Henrietta A. Lenox, sister of the founder, died during the year; by her will, probated April 26, 1887, the library received the sum of $100,000 to be applied to the purchase of books alone, and the grant of the remainder of the block between 70th and 71st Streets, the library front on Fifth Avenue and Madison Avenue, "upon the express condition that no building of any description except an addition to or extension of the present library building shall at any time be erected or permitted to be erected upon that portion of the above devised property lying westerly of a line parallel with Madison Avenue and one hundred feet westerly therefrom."<sup>1</sup>

Beginning with November 8, 1887, tickets of admission were dispensed with. This caused a temporary increase in the number of visitors, which had steadily decreased from the 19,957 recorded in 1880 to 10,976 in 1886; the total for 1887 was 13,000, of which 2,901 were recorded between November <sup>1</sup> By an agreement, dated July 20, 1906, between the Library and twenty heirs of Henrietta A. Lenox, the restrictions imposed in the will were removed, and the release of the interests of the Lenox heirs in the easterly portion of the Lenox Library property was secured by a payment to them of $800,000. An extension of the time of payment from January 1, 1907, to April 1, 1907, was secured from the adult heirs who had executed the agreement, so that a special act could be passed by the State Legislature authorizing the sale of the interest of Maitland Belknap, a minor.

The entire block between 70th and 71st Streets was sold to various persons, for a total of $5,058,600.

8 and December 31. The increase proved to be temporary, however, 1888 showing but 8,263, 1889 a total of 8,708, 1890 of 10,724, 1891 of 9,569. In this period the library was closed during July - September. In 1892 it was open only till May 14,<sup>1</sup> after which it was turned over to the mechanics for the rearrangements necessitated by the Stuart gift. In the following years the number of visitors doubled, being 20,225 in 1893 and 26,156 in 1894.

Two events of note in 1888 were the purchase of an illuminated manuscript executed by Giulio Clovio and the bequest of the musical library of Joseph W. Drexel. The Clovio manuscript, a lectionary, is one of the best pieces of work done by "the Raphael of miniaturists," and was supposed to have been executed by him for Cardinal Alessandro Farnese as a gift for his uncle, Pope Paul III.

The Drexel bequest consisted of 5,542 volumes and 766 pamphlets relating exclusively to music; it came to the library subject to certain conditions, such as the requirement that the collection be kept by itself, that the books be distinctively marked, etc. In the course of 1888 and 1889, it was classified and there was printed for it a short-title list of sufficient fullness of entry to serve as a guide or finding list. In 1890 Mrs. Lucy W. Drexel, widow of the donor, presented a marble portrait bust of her husband, executed by J. Q. A. Ward.

No. VI of the "Contributions to a Catalogue of the Lenox Library," had been issued in 1881. Outside of the Hulsius collection, the Jesuit Relations, Thevenot's Voyages, the Bunyan, Shakespeare, and Milton collections catalogued in these "Contributions," there was in print no complete catalogue of the library, the only record of the collection consisting of Mr. Lenox's check lists in interleaved bibliographies and in his own note books. In November, 1887, were printed, for official use, ten short-title lists of various groups, copy for these lists being arranged, transcribed, and printed within a period of about four weeks, which gave no opportunity for revision of copy or correcting of proofs. The groups thus listed were: (1) Bibles, etc., in English; (2) Bibles in various languages; (3) Americana; (4) Miscellaneous; (5) Shakespeare, Angling, Milton, Bunyan; (6) Aldines, Indexes, Manuscripts, engravings, caricatures; (7) Astoin collection; (8) Duyckinck collection; (9) paintings, sculptures, porcelain, enamels, mosaics, medals, carvings, etc.; (10) miscellaneous collections in the reading rooms. No. 11 was printed in 1889 from the interleaved catalogue received with the Drexel collection. No. 12 recorded part two of the Duyckinck collection and was printed from title slips made from the books themselves. During 1889 a selection from these lists was revised, cut up, and pasted into scrap books in one alphabet to serve as a temporary guide or finding list.

During 1889 the New York Historical Society made overtures towards purchase of a portion of the property devised by Miss Lenox in 1887 but the proposal was declined after mature consideration. In this same year was purchased the library of the late president of the board of trustees, duplicates and other works in the collection not belonging to the field in which the library was specializing being sold at auction.<sup>1</sup> The portrait of Van Brugh Livingston painted by Sir Henry Raeburn and presented by Alexander Maitland formed an important accession to the picture gallery.

Two portraits by Daniel Huntington, one of James Lenox, the founder, and the other of his nephew Robert Lenox Kennedy, second president of the board, were presented in 1890 by John S. Kennedy, third president. He also gave a collection of one hundred and five volumes, original editions of the Waverly novels, and the subsequent separate publications of the introductions and notes.

A lot of fifty-nine letters and other documents relating to the early history of Scotland and 155 letters, poems, and extracts from favorite authors alleged to be in the handwriting of Robert Burns was given by him also at this time. The gift aroused no little comment at the time because of its peculiar interest; later examination showed that the entire collection was a clever modern forgery, and the collection was of course withdrawn from exhibition.

These forgeries were the work of Archibald Howland Smith, a lawyer's clerk employed by the firm with which at one time Scott had done business. From papers given him to destroy he had taken several Scott letters which, after his discharge, he had sold; the ready market for such papers suggested forging others. A stock of (real and apparent) old paper, a ready wit, and a clever hand provided him soon with an almost exhaustless store of manuscripts. Many of these he sold to Stille, the father of the Edinburgh book trade, and from Stille Mr. Kennedy secured the lot he gave to the library.

After the discovery of the forgery Smith was arrested on December 5, 1892, held for trial before the High Court of Edinburgh, found guilty on June 28, 1893, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment.

The Barlow and Ives sales in New York in 1890 and 1891 gave opportunity for purchases of Americana of first importance. Mention may be made of the Barlow Brereton's Brief and True Relation (London, 1602), bought for $1,125; Rosier's True Relation (London, 1605), for $1,825; Isola's Portolano (Venice, 1528), for $320; Les Veritables Motifs de Messieurs et Dames de la Société de Nostre Dame de Montreal ([Paris,] 1643), for $310; Lettre Circulaire de la Mort de la Reverende Mere Catherine de S. Augustine, Religieuse Hospitaliere de Quebec [1668], for $265; Pynchon's Meritorious Price of our Redemption (London, 1650), for $480; Winslow's Good Newes from New-England (London, 1624), for $350; and the twenty-one volumes of manuscripts collected by George Chalmers the historian, bought for $2,310.

The bequest of the Stuart collection was the most important event of 1892. This consisted of 11,888 volumes and 1,963 pamphlets, 240 paintings, a large collection of minerals, shells, and other objects of natural history, besides many pieces of bric à brac, carvings, and art curiosities. The most important part of the library related to natural history, but there were also over 2,000 volumes connected with American history, 2,000 volumes relating to theology and ecclesiastical history (including 400 editions of the Bible), 1,500 volumes relating to art, 200 to bibliography and literary history, and 50 illuminated manuscripts.

Robert Leighton Stuart was a sugar refiner of New York City, active in the business, charitable, religious, and educational life of the city. He succeeded John David Wolfe, first president of the American Museum of Natural History, and served as head of that institution from 1872-1881, when he retired on account of his health. It was commonly supposed he had intended his collections for the Museum, but at his death (December 12, 1882) they passed to his widow to whom he left his entire estate.

Mrs. Stuart's will left $50,000 to the American Museum of Natural History "for the purpose of maintaining the buildings of that institution, and the specimens illustrative of Natural History therein contained in good order," on condition that the Museum was never to be open on Sunday; the "books and works relating to Natural History. . . also the minerals, shells and other specimens" likewise went to the Museum. Princeton was to receive such books and specimens as the Museum did not take, and to Princeton Theological Seminary went all Bibles printed in English.

The will was dated January 18, 1887. Between that date and November following Mrs. Stuart changed her mind and revoked, by codicil dated November 15, 1887, the bequests to the American Museum and to Princeton, leaving all the books, all the minerals and other specimens, all the paintings and objects of art to the Lenox Library. The bequest was accompanied by the conditions that the collection be kept separate, in a special room, and that it never be exhibited "on the Lord's Day." She was undoubtedly influenced to take this step by Mr. Kennedy who was at once an executor of her will and president of the Lenox, and by her fear that the American Museum of Natural History and Metropolitan Museum of Art (to which she left $50,000, which was likewise revoked) would yield to the growing popular demand and open their doors on Sunday. The fear was not realized for a year or two<sup>1</sup> but it was strong enough to keep the codicils unchanged and to transfer the collections from the museums to the library.

To carry out the provisions of the will it was necessary to refinish and equip the north room on the second floor for reception of the books, paintings, minerals, etc. It was deemed best to close the building and give the whole interior a thorough renovation and to use this opportunity for replacing the original roof, which had leaked consistently and persistently, with a new roof of copper. From May 14, 1892, until February 21, 1893, the building was in the hands of the workmen. On the latter date it was opened to some seven hundred invited guests and on Washington's birthday opened to the public.

Undoubtedly the most important single acquisition of 1892 was the only known copy of the original Spanish edition (printed probably at Barcelona) of the letter of Columbus written to Luis de Santangel, treasurer of Aragon, dated February 15 – March 14, 1493, announcing his discoveries in the new world; the letter, two leaves of text, had been discovered in Spain in 1809, was priced by Maisonneuve of Paris at 65,000 francs, passed from him to Quaritch of London who held it at £1,600, and by Quaritch was sold to the library for £1,500.

The four hundredth anniversary of the first voyage of Columbus brought with it a stir of public interest in the literature of the discovery period. As their contribution towards the anniversary celebration the trustees printed in October a facsimile of the illustrated Latin edition of Columbus' letter to Gabriel Sanchez — the Lenox (Heber-Libri) copy being the only perfect one known — together with the text of the four earliest editions in Latin, and a bibliographical introduction and a translation by Wilberforce Eames, the (then) assistant librarian; it was issued in two editions, one on hand-made paper, large paper in size, a limited edition for presentation purposes, and a popular edition for sale.<sup>2</sup> The introduction was dated October 21, 1892, and the Spanish edition was received at the end of the same month. This new accession and the demand for the reprint necessitated a second edition of the pamphlet. It was issued May 1, 1893, with a revised introduction taking note of the Spanish edition; the text comprised only the facsimile of the illustrated Latin edition and a translation.<sup>1</sup>

When the Duke of Veragua was in New York on his visit to the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, he spent a good portion of the 19th of June, 1893, at the Lenox building; the exhibition of Columbus material interested him so much that he expressed a desire for a list of the manuscripts in the library relating to Columbus and his family. This list of over two hundred pieces was duly forwarded to him in Spain, and in May, 1894, he sent in return a list of forty-six documents in his possession exhibited at the Chicago exposition, their dates ranging between 1488 and 1537.

The gift was sent through Mr. Louis Windmüller of this city and was accompanied by a letter and photographs of himself and his son bearing the autograph signatures of the subjects. In announcing this gift the New York Times of May 19, 1894, stated that the original manuscripts had been presented; this paragraph was copied far and wide in the newspaper press and gave rise to some amusing comments. The Chicago Herald stated that "For the Duke of Veragua not to give Chicago a chance to buy them, but to have presented them as a gift to a community and an institution neither desiring nor deserving them, is not only ingratitude on his part, but looks like mere spite."

Dr. Moore, superintendent of the library since 1872 and secretary of the board of trustees since 1876, died May 5, 1892. At the regular meeting of the trustees held May 6, Mr. Maitland was appointed secretary and superintendent pro tem. Mr. Wilberforce Eames, who had been Dr. Moore's secretary and assistant since 1885, was appointed assistant librarian on October 7, 1892, the appointment to date from May 1. On June 2, 1893, he was made librarian and Mr. I. Ferris Lockwood was appointed superintendent.

An amendment to the charter had been secured on March 19, 1892, permitting the trustees at their discretion to increase their number from nine to not exceeding twenty-four, and directing that the then board appoint a time for an annual meeting, divide itself into three classes with terms of service of one, two, and three years respectively, and that thereafter at each annual meeting one-third of the number be elected to serve for three years. The first Friday in January was appointed as the date of the annual meeting, the term of the first class of trustees to expire January 5, 1893.

At this time the board was organized with John S. Kennedy president and Alexander Maitland secretary and treasurer; trustees of the first class (term expiring January, 1894) were John S. Kennedy, Alexander Maitland, H. Van Rensselaer Kennedy, William Allen Butler, and J. Henry Harper; the second class (term expiring January, 1895) were Frederick Sturges, Charles Scribner, William S. Tod, John Sloane, William F. Havemeyer; the third class (term expiring January, 1896) were Daniel Huntington, Stephen Baker, George L. Rives, with two vacancies.

So far as material for study of American history was concerned the library was unusually well provided for the period of discovery and the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; for later periods its material was uneven, almost weak. This deficiency was overcome by the purchase on April 1, 1894, of the library of George Bancroft, the historian, at a price of $84,492.15. By his will Bancroft had directed that his historical manuscripts be first offered for sale undivided to the Library of Congress, for which purpose they were to be reserved not longer than three years. The library was appraised and offered to Congress at a price of $75,000. The time limit having nearly expired — Bancroft died on January 17, 1891 — with no action taken by Congress, negotiations were opened on behalf of the library with the result that the whole collection of manuscripts and printed books were sold to it and brought to New York.

To state that the collection comprised 14,606 printed volumes, 4,648 pamphlets, and 486 volumes in manuscript gives no adequate idea of its importance for students of American history. It was the working library brought together by the man who had written what is probably the best known history of the country; the History stopped with the adoption of the Constitution and within the limits of the discovery to 1788 the material collected by him was undoubtedly without a rival in private hands.

The most important manuscripts in the Lenox collection were the papers relating to Spanish America collected by Muñoz, the Spanish historian, from whom they passed to Henri Ternaux-Compans, thence to Obadiah Rich of London, thence to Mr. Lenox who purchased them about 1850. The Bancroft manuscripts related mainly to the British colonies and to the Revolutionary and early constitutional period of the United Colonies and the United States. These two collections, with the B. F. Stevens "Facsimiles of Manuscripts in European Archives relating to America," provided the Lenox Library with manuscript material relating to the country before 1800 that was surpassed in importance by few other libraries in the United States. It is manifestly impossible to speak here in detail of the papers in the Bancroft library; suffice it to say that they included twenty-seven folio volumes of letters and papers of Samuel Adams and the Boston Committee of Correspondence, original papers of most of the prominent actors in the Revolutionary period, and over three hundred folio volumes of transcripts from public and private archives of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia and from the American colonies and American colonial families. Of the printed books about 8,000 volumes and 3,000 pamphlets related to American history, 2,000 volumes to English history and literature, 1,500 volumes to German literature and philosophy, 1,000 volumes to French and Italian literature, 500 volumes to Greek and Roman literature, besides the miscellaneous works one would expect to find in the library of a man of such a wide experience in affairs as Bancroft.

The Lenox collection was further supplemented this year by extensive purchases of American laws and legislative journals printed before 1800, of books and manuscripts from the library of the late superintendent Dr. George H. Moore. The collection of early printed books received important additions in a fine and perfect copy of Higden's Polychronicon, printed by Caxton in 1482, a French translation of Josephus printed on vellum at Paris by Antoine Verard in 1492, four Cologne imprints of Ulrich Zell in 1467, and the first edition of Suetonius printed at Rome in 1470 by Philip de Lignamine.

An interesting collection of 435 volumes was presented in 1894 by Dr. Wendell Prime consisting entirely of editions of Don Quixote and other works by Cervantes. Another important accession consisted of over 45,000 numbers of early American newspapers, including specimens of nearly every important file of the colonial and revolutionary periods — a purchase from Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet and Charles R. Hildeburn. The sale of the second portion of Dr. Moore's library in February and the Livermore sale at Boston in November, 1894, gave opportunity for the purchase of some 615 and 449 pieces, important additions in Americana, manuscripts, maps, Bibles, early educational works, catechisms, primers, and English literature.

Four manuscripts secured this year deserve special mention. From the Moore estate was purchased in May the letter written by General Charles Lee on March 29, 1777, while held a prisoner by the British, offering a plan for subjugating the Americans. The manuscript had been discovered in England in 1857, when it was secured by Dr. Moore; in his hands it formed the basis of his work on The Treason of Charles Lee. At the Moore sale was purchased a long holograph letter, in five folio pages, written by Rev. Jonas Michaëlius, the first minister of the Dutch Reformed Church in America, addressed to the Rev. Adrian Smoutius in Amsterdam, and dated from the island of Manhatas in New Netherland August 11, 1628, one of the earliest documents written in this city. Two documents in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson were presented by Mr. Alexander Maitland, the first his holograph draft of a proposed constitution for Virginia, written in June, 1776, with a preamble containing many phrases and sentences subsequently repeated in the Declaration of Independence; the second was the draft of a proposed amendment to the national constitution admitting Louisiana into the union in 1803.

In June, 1894, was begun a subject catalogue on cards. By September, two sets of the printed catalogue of the Stuart collection had been cut up, the entries pasted on cards, and the cards distributed alphabetically by subjects in the public catalogue cases. Titles for books in the Lenox and Bancroft collections and for new accessions were then copied in manuscript and similarly distributed according to subject. In August a beginning was made in transferring to cards the titles of the author catalogue. This author catalogue consisted of four scrap book volumes made in 1889 by mounting in one alphabet the titles noted in the various short-title lists then issued; its utility had been seriously impaired by the interleaving of additional titles, until there came to be several alphabets. By obtaining the services of two copyists, the work was finished in November, in a separate alphabet of 26,000 cards; author entries for the Stuart and Bancroft books increased the number to about 40,000; the subject entries—in a separate alphabet—amounted to 30,000 cards. Subsequently the two alphabets of author and subject cards were filed together in dictionary form, thus providing a public working index to the collection, complete except for certain special groups such as the Bible collection, early Americana, maps, manuscripts, etc.

The exhibition of rare books, maps, manuscripts, etc., in the north hall was increased and rearranged preliminary to the making of a catalogue or guide book for visitors. It was planned in this way to illustrate by early examples the arts of writing, book-illumination, engraving; the early history of printing in Europe and America; the discovery, settlement, and history of this country; the oldest and most famous editions of the Bible in various languages; and other masterpieces of literature in manuscript and print. The preliminary movements towards consolidation in 1895 and the consequent uncertainty of administrative policy stepped in, however, to forbid the printing of the handbook. At the Lenox building, as at the Astor, the policy in these last few years was one of drifting, constructive work waiting for the developments of the new administration and the new library.

NEWS OF THE MONTH

GIFTS

DURING the month of August the Library received as gifts a total of 1,734 volumes, 3,680 pamphlets, 4 maps, and 27 prints. The following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of these gifts: From Lieutenant Georges Guénot of Paris the Library received copies of a periodical published in the trenches, — "Le Petit Voisognard; Organe du 369e Terrassiers," Année 1, no. 1 (November 30, 1914), Année 2, no. 30 (Mai 10, 1915); from the bequest of Alexander Maitland, two manuscript volumes of the original précis books of secret and official correspondence of Messrs. Jackson, Morier and Foster, successively British ministers to the United States, addressed from 1809 to 1811, to George Canning, Earl Bathurst and Marquis of Wellesley, British foreign secretaries; from Miss Jennie C. Kitchin of Jersey City, six political cartoons of Abraham Lincoln and Hamlin, published in 1860; and from Benjamin Adams and H. Adams, nine manuscript maps and plans of early New York surveys.

The following gifts of music were received: From Chev. Eduardo Marzo of New York, came 117 of his own compositions; from G. Schirmer, Inc., New York, 21 pieces of music; from Mr. E. L. Snelson of St. Louis, Missouri, a copy of "Wonders in the Sun, or; The Kingdom of the birds, A comick opera, Written by Mr. Durfey, London, 1706"; from Miss Ottoria Trube of Hastings-on-Hudson, 17 pieces of music; and from Mr. William B. Tuthill of New York, 12 volumes of music and works on music.

Miscellaneous collections were received as follows: From Mr. S. Jacobs of New York the Library received 1 bound volume and 55 single numbers of periodicals, including the "Practical Druggist," "Optical Journal," etc.; from Mr. A. Kashishian of New York, 22 volumes and 52 pamphlets, comprising periodicals and reports; from Mr. Charles N. Young of New York, 104 periodicals and reports; and from Miss K. M. Steeves of New York, 23 volumes of Chautauqua Reading Circle literature.

ADDITIONS AND USE OF THE LIBRARY DURING AUGUST, 1916

DURING the month of August, 1916, there were received at the Library 19,913 volumes and 4,249 pamphlets. (These figures include the additions to both Reference and Circulation Departments.) The total number of readers recorded in the Central Building was 57,199. They consulted 165,702 volumes. Visitors to the building numbered 150,648.

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Allen, Frederick J. The shoe industry ... Boston: The Vocation Bureau [cop. 1916]. 327 p., 1 pl. illus. 8°. VMK

"It is the purpose of this study to give the nature, history, magnitude, operations and processes, employment opportunities and demands, and the future of the industry, both for those already in it and for other persons, and their advisers and teachers, who may be considering employment in this field of manufacture." — Preface.

Gives tables of wages in the different departments; also a glossary of terms used in the industry.

Cosgrove, James F. Coal, its economical and smokeless combustion. Philadelphia: Technical Book Pub. Co. [cop. 1916]. 273 p. illus. 8°. VHW

Appendix comprises analyses of 319 American coals.

"Mr. Cosgrove has prepared a descriptive discussion of the geology and chemistry of coal, and the physics and engineering of fuel combustion, in a plain and readable fashion that ought to make the fundamental information available for business men, factory managers, civil engineers, contractors, and all others not specially trained in power generation processes. How comparatively small a volume is really essential to treat adequately many important engineering topics is thus again exemplified." — Engineering news, July 20, 1916, p. 121.

Also reviewed in Metallurgical and chemical engineering, May 15, 1916, p. 614; in Power, July 4, 1916, p. 40; and in National engineer, June, 1916, p. 300.

Duryea, Charles E., and J. E. HOMANS. The automobile book; a practical treatise on the construction, operation and care of motor cars propelled by gasoline engines; with full explanations of all the essential parts. New York: Sturgis & Walton Co., 1916. 2 p.l., 348 p. illus. 8°. TON

An up-to-date and simply written manual in which the different parts and their modes of operation are clearly described. The inquiring owner will here find the advantages and disadvantages of certain types of apparatus fairly discussed, as for example eight and twelve cylinder motors, air cooling, water cooling, etc. There is a good chapter on the selection of the car.

International Engineering Congress, 1915. Transactions. v. 3, 6-7, 10-11. San Francisco, 1916. 4°. VDA

Will probably be issued in eleven volumes of which the Library at present has:

- [v. 3.] Municipal engineering. 539 p.
- [v. 6.] Mechanical engineering. 532 p.
- [v. 7.] Electrical engineering and hydroelectric power development. 559 p.
- [v. 10.] Naval architecture and marine engineering. 796 p.
- [v. 11.] Waterways and irrigation. 753 p.

Kent, Robert Thurston. Power transmission by leather belting. New York: J. Wiley & Sons, 1916. vi, 114 p. illus.

tables. 1. ed. 8°. (Wiley engineering series.) VFR

"Concurrently with the development of improved methods of production there has grown up an improved system of belting practice, which has kept pace with production. The literature of these improved belting methods is buried in transactions of engineering societies and in the files of technical journals. It is so scattered that it is difficult for the average man to comprehend that the art of power transmission by means of leather belting has completely changed in the past ten or fifteen years. The object of this book has been to gather together the best information on the new practice and compile it in a form that would be of the greatest service to the belt user." — Preface.

Marks, Lionel S. Mechanical engineers' handbook, based on the Hütte and prepared by a staff of specialists... New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1916. xxiii, 1836 p. illus. 12°. Desk - Tech.Div.

Comprises over 1800 pages of closely packed and conveniently arranged information by well known writers, each an expert in his field. Similar in character to the German Hütte, which it follows in the more theoretical sections, although changes have been made to meet American conditions. Those portions dealing with engineering practice are stated to be entirely new. Electrical and civil engineering are included to some extent and there are special sections devoted to aeronautics, automobiles, building construction, heating and ventilation, illumination, refrigeration, and railway engineering. Well provided with illustrations and bibliographical references. A mine of information for the engineer or the technical librarian.

"This book is the most thorough and comprehensive mechanical engineers' handbook adapted to American practice, if not in the English language, and its usefulness is considerably enhanced by certain features of the make-up. Both the front and back covers contain an index to major topics and a list of the more important tables is given on each fly-leaf. The book is provided with thumb tabs so that the reader, after looking at the index on the covers and finding there the section number, may turn immediately... to the section in which he is interested. The important reference tables have the page reference so that they can be turned to immediately." — Railway mechanical engineer, July, 1916, p. 333.

Also reviewed in Gas engineer, July, 1916; in American machinist, July 13, 1916; in Canadian engineer, June 29, 1916; in Mining and scientific press, July 15, 1916.

Martin, Geoffrey. Modern chemistry and its wonders; a popular account of some of the more remarkable recent advances in chemical science for general readers. London: Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., 1915. xvi, 351 p., 25 pl. illus. 8°. PKP

A companion volume to Triumphs and wonders of modern chemistry, by the same author. Treats in an interesting manner, with good illustrations, the subjects of the simple nitrogen compounds, explosives, radium, the mystery of the periodic law, modern alchemy, applications of electricity to chemistry, the romance of the hydrocarbons, sugar, alcohol, coal-tar, and common salt, with chapters on metallic firestones and artificial precious stones.

"It is difficult for a professional worker in any subject to review accurately a popular exposition of the 'wonders' which form the familiar material of his 'daily round and common task.' The best criticism of such a work is obviously that of the general reader, for whom it is intended; but the author's colleagues can at least bear witness to the fact that the wonders are described correctly, without exaggeration and without any undue appeal 'to the gallery.'" — Nature, May 25, 1916, p. 257-258.

Still, Alfred. Principles of electrical design; D. C. and A. C. generators. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1916. xiv, 365 p. illus. 8°. VGI

By the professor of electrical design in Purdue University. Emphasizes fundamental principles and general applications, but does not claim adequately to deal with the strictly mechanical side. The introduction broadly discusses the relation of the designer to his profession.

"It should be realized clearly that the true designer is a maker, not an imitator. The function of the designer is to create. His value as a live factor in the engineering world will increase by just so much as he rises above the level of the mere copyist. The man who can see what has to be done, and how it may be done, is always of greater value than the man who merely does a thing, however skillfully, when the manner of doing it has been explained to him." — Introduction.

Van Auken, Kenneth L. Practical track maintenance. Chicago, Ill.: Railway Educational Press (cop. 1916), 319 p. 8°. TPD

Treats in a practical way the ins and outs of everyday section work. Of notable interest, not only to the track superintendent, but to the general reader as well, are the three chapters on labor problems, including a discussion of the adaptability of the various races for their tasks.

ORIENTAL ART

This list of some of the more recent accessions in this field, though a brief one, well emphasises the manifold and varied interest of that expression of different racial and national ideals and aspirations which we group under the name "Oriental Art."

Averill, Mary. The flower art of Japan. With 129 illustrations. New York: J. Lane Co., 1915. 215 p., 1 pl. illus. 8°. MAG

"This volume carries further the study commenced in Miss Averill's 'Japanese flower arrangement'... In Japan numerous schools of flower arrangement exist... A new school, which encouraged the following of western styles... is one evidence that in cutting loose from their own traditions the Japanese have lost much of the purity of their original style." — New York Times, March 16, 1916.

Coomaraswamy, Ananda K. Rajput painting; being an account of the Hindu paintings of Rajasthan and the Panjab Himalayas from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century, described in their relation to contemporary thought, with texts and translations by Ananda Coomaraswamy... London: H. Milford, 1916. 2 v. f°. †† MAF

Contents: v. 1. Text. v. 2. Plates.

"We see how the painstaking and specialized study of a group of closely allied schools throws fresh light on the history of painting in India, and at the same time on the history of the civilization which inspired it. It also enables us to arrive at a deeper understanding of one of the most moving psychologies of the East." — Burlington magazine, May, 1916.

India Society, London. Ajanta frescoes; being reproductions in colour and monochrome of frescoes in some of the caves at Ajanta, after copies taken in the years 1909-1911 by Lady Herringham and her assistants, with introductory essays by various members of the India Society. London: H. Milford, 1915. 28 p., 43 pl. f°. †† MAF

"The reproductions in colour are the work of Mr. Emery Walker, and the monochromes of the Oxford University Press."

"Short bibliography of works treating of ancient Indian painting... of Buddhist iconography or mythology as represented in art," p. 27-28.

"With superb reproductions... here is issued a libretto hardly less interesting than the copies of the Ajanta frescoes executed by Lady Herringham and her talented assistants... The copies appear to vary in merit, particularly those of the native assistants." — Robert Ross, in Burlington magazine, July, 1916, p. 154.

Japan Society, London. Catalogue of an exhibition of the arms and armour of old Japan, held by the Japan Society, London, in June, 1905. London: The Japan Society (1905). 147 p., 40 pl. 4°. † MAG

List of Committee. List of contributors. Introduction: The arms and armour of old Japan, by M. B. Huish. Japanese arms and armour in the royal collection, by G. F. Laking. The Japanese sword, by A. Dobrée. The sword-guard, by A. H. Church. Decoration of the parts of the sword-hilt and scabbard (other than the guard), by M. B. Huish. Bows, arrows, and quivers, by W. Harding-Smith. Pictures illustrating arms and armour, by E. F. Strange. The Japanese soldier's uniform in 1905. Catalogue of exhibits.

Jéquier, Gustave. Décoration égyptienne. Plafonds et frises végétales du nouvel empire thébain (1400 à 1000 avant J. C.). 40 planches en couleurs contenant 63 motifs. Paris: Librairie centrale d'art et d'architecture (cop. 1911). 25 p., 2 l., 40 pl. illus. f°. † MAF

Ku K'ai-chih, 4th century. Admonitions of the instructor in the palace. A painting by Ku K'ai-chih in the Department of Prints and Drawings, British Museum, reproduced in coloured woodcut. Text by Laurence Binyon... Scroll and text. London: the trustees, 1912. 2 parts. 8°. MAG and Print Room Reserve

A makimono, rolled on a stick, being a fac-simile of the original painting, accompanied by text in separate pamphlet. The reproduction engraved by S. Sugisaki and printed in colors by Y. Urushibara.

Makimono in wooden box, pamphlet bound separately.

Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York. Special exhibition of Chinese paintings from the collection of the museum. Catalogue by John C. Ferguson... New York, 1914. xv, 72 p., 1 l., 10 pl. 8°. MAG

Noguchi, Yone. ... The spirit of Japanese art. London: J. Murray, 1915. 114 p.

"One who would move not too grotesquely among the screens and lacquers from Gedo... should take heed unto... Noguchi and his significant little volume. With particular verve he declares 'poetry and atmosphere, but not mere style and purpose,' to be the constant aims of the art of his native land. He bears out this thesis vaguely... One may, at least, be sure of the spirit and enthusiasm of the author."—New York Times, July 23, 1916.

Taki, Sei-ichi. Three essays on Oriental painting. London: B. Quaritch, 1910. 4 p.l., [xi]–xii, 84 p., 57 pl. 4°. MAG

Tredwell, Winifred Van Schaick Reed. Chinese art motives, interpreted by Winifred Reed Tredwell... New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1915. xiii p., 1 l., 110 p., 11 pl. 8°. MAG

"A popular presentation of material as yet found only in technical descriptions and collections."

THE HERITAGE OF THE MODERN PRINTER

BY MARGARET BINGHAM STILLWELL

THE "Revival of Printing," which began about twenty-five years ago, came at a time when the art of bookmaking had become so commercialized, in the haste and competition of the nineteenth century, that it had practically forfeited its right to be termed an Art. The movement is, therefore, most appropriately called a "Revival" for it was started in the endeavor to print modern books equal in beauty and in workmanship to the noblest products in the history of printing.

The invention of movable type in the middle of the fifteenth century was an innovation which did not at the time materially affect bookmaking as an Art. Through generation after generation of painstaking effort the scribes and illuminators had achieved a perfection in bookmaking which has never been surpassed. The early printers did not have to grope their way along. As scholars and as men of literary tastes they were already familiar with some of the most beautiful books which the world has ever seen. It remained for them to adapt the new invention to standards already well established. The monumental works issued from their presses bear witness to their success, but competition was not lacking in their work. There was the keenest rivalry between the transcribers and illuminators on the one hand, and the printers of movable type on the other. It was a long struggle, and until the art of printing had finally superseded that of manuscript making, the printers were forced to prove themselves capable in every way of living up to the standards maintained by those skilled craftsmen who so zealously fought for the continuance of their trade. When it was over, competition of another sort arose — between the printers themselves — and this competition gave rise to the practice of economy in time and in material. Former standards were swept aside in industrial struggle and there began a process of deterioration which, with a few exceptions, was continuous in its growth until well toward the end of the nineteenth century.

By the end of the eighteenth century Caslon type, which, in its straightforward way, had lent something of charm to English printed books, was already out of style. Shaded letters after the manner of a certain specie of penmanship, first introduced by Baskerville, became the fashion in type, and for purposes of economy in space these letters were re-cut from time to time in narrower and taller founts. Title-pages, if not actually engraved, were printed in type designed to look like copperplate. The accepted method of beautifying a book was by interleaving it heavily with plates, on the apparent theory that the more plates the more beautiful the book. In 1844, however, the younger Whittingham revived the Caslon type in his work at the Chiswick Press and reintroduced ornamental initial letters in the text, such as had been used in books of the sixteenth century. Both he and William Pickering, the publisher, used their own good sense, neither following the past in servile imitation, nor allowing themselves to be bound to the fashion of the day. Although Chiswick books from that time had a certain influence upon contemporary printing, they did not effectually turn the tide. Type, in general, became more evenly tinted, to be sure, and ornamental letters and headbands were used as decorations. But the latter soon degenerated into meaningless type ornaments of rococo origin. Occasionally, books of a higher order were issued. The Rev. C. H. O. Daniel, for instance, issued some genuinely attractive little books at his private press in Oxford, and Mr. Herbert P. Horne and Selwyn Image together published in the late eighties a magazine, called "The Hobby-Horse," in which especial care was given to the printing. The real impetus to the revival of fine printing came in the establishment of the Kelm-scott Press in 1891. Horace Walpole, a hundred years before, had attempted to produce beautiful books, in limited edition, at his Strawberry Hill Press. His standards of beauty were according to those of his day. William Morris first tried to produce beautiful books at the Chiswick Press. Failing to satisfy his own ideals, he cast off stereotyped methods, and set himself the task of producing modern books according to the standards of the master printers of the fifteenth century.

The establishment of the Kelmscott Press was the culmination of three factors in Morris's own personality — his appreciation of the noblest of human thoughts as expressed in literature and in art; his interest in the practical working out of certain industrial ideals; and his passion for the creation of the Beautiful. He had struggled with British commercialism for years. He had attacked various crafts one after another, and had demonstrated that, in each case, industrial changes for the better were possible. Through socialism he had sought to establish conditions in which Art could live. His aim was industrial revolution through reform, and it was only when an aggressive policy was adopted that he withdrew his support from the Socialistic party. To him, the various crafts were closely allied, because each was but another method of expressing Beauty, and he was as much the master of one craft as of another. In his trades of interior decorator and printer, he was both workman and designer; as a writer, he was poet, essayist and translator. In whatever came from his hand, he combined two factors — his own creative genius and the best that he found in the similar products of the past. Therein lay his conservatism.

Although the idea of founding a press had evidently long been in his mind, it seems clear as we review the various activities of his life that, until those last years, the time was not yet ripe, for it is through his examples of fine printing, perhaps more than in any other way, that Morris was able to

In the early sixties, Morris had taken up the study of woodcuts for the purpose of book illustration. In the next decade, he began to devote much time to the study of ancient illuminated service books, the results of which appeared in his exquisitely illuminated copies of Horace and Omar Khayyam. During the eighties, he had published several books at the Chiswick Press in which he had tried to adapt the means at hand to the best possible use. Convinced that his ideal could not be achieved in this way, he set out to design his own type. "There was only one source," he wrote, in regard to the designing of his Golden Type, "from which to take the examples of this perfected Roman type, the works of the printers of the Fifteenth Century, of whom Nicolas Jenson produced the completest and most Roman characters from 1470 to 1476." So from photographic enlargements, Morris studied Jenson's type and redrew his designs until he mastered the essence of it. In 1889, he had begun a systematic collection of the best examples of the early printers' work in order that he might study the make-up and "build" more thoroughly than from the specimens of incunabula which he already possessed. It was from these books that he deduced his laws for fine printing — "letter pure in form; severe, without needless excrescences; solid, without the thickening and thinning of the line which is the essential fault of the ordinary modern type, and which makes it difficult to read; and not compressed laterally. As for margin, the inner always the narrowest, the top somewhat wider, the outside (fore-edge) wider still and the bottom widest of all, a rule never departed from in Mediaeval books, written or printed" — the technical side of which, Morris explains in great detail in his essay on "The Ideal Book."

The first printers had put into their books the best that they had found in the bookmaking of the past. To the manuscript makers and the skilled illuminators, therefore, is due the grace and vigor in the type designed by the best of the early printers and in the type — similar, although somewhat modified in form — which appears in the best of modern books. From them, we inherit the desire to give to the printed page that evenness of color and regularity of spacing for which they strove in painstaking hand labor. And to them we owe the idea, perhaps greatest of all, that the two pages of the open book are a unit in which a well proportioned margin should surround the blocks of type — so that the hand holding the book may not soil the text.

The paper used in the Kelmscott paper-copies was made expressly for Morris, hand woven from linen rags and successfully modelled, after much experimentation, upon a Bolognese paper of about 1473. It is fine grained, fairly thin yet tough, and it has a clean, pleasant feeling to the hand. According to its grade or size, it was water-marked with a conventional primrose, a perch bearing a spray, or an apple—each water-mark supported by the initials “W” and “M.” Morris intended to make his own ink in course of time, and it is very probable that he would have accomplished this also if his death had not brought his work so suddenly to a close.

The first Kelmscott book, which appeared in the spring of 1891, was in the Golden Type, the Roman fount which Morris based upon his study of Jenson. Before the end of the year, another fount was ready for use. This was Gothic, based upon the type of the early German printers, notably Schoeffer, Zainer and Koberger; and called the Troy, from the title of the first book in which it appeared. Within a few years this Troy Type was re-cast in a fount of smaller size and used in the sumptuous folio of 1896, issued only a short time before Morris's death — the Chaucer, from which this small-sized Gothic type took its name.

Upon the title-pages of his books, Morris printed only such statements as referred directly to the subject matter, after the manner of the so-called "label-title" which came into being about 1490. The facts regarding the production of the book, the printer, place and date, nowadays contained generally in the imprint at the bottom of the title-page, Morris reserved for the end of the volume, like the colophons used by the manuscript makers and the early printers. The placing of these details, whether all on the title-page or divided into title-heading and colophon, is of course purely arbitrary. There is no absolute right or wrong in the matter. Yet much may be said for the logic of the latter arrangement.

One of the first to catch the spirit of Morris's venture was Mr. Charles Ricketts. Like Morris, Mr. Ricketts began his career as printer by trying to create beautiful books with the printers' outfit of the day, and like him he came to the conclusion that success could not be attained under conditions as they were. It was several years after Morris began to produce his Kelmscott books before Mr. Ricketts began to work out designs for a fount of his own. Between 1896 and 1904, when the last book from the so-called Vale Press was issued, he designed three sets of type — the Vale, the Avon and the Kings founts. In his theory of type-design, however, Mr. Ricketts differed fundamentally from Morris. In the work of the early printers Morris saw the crystallization of the best that had been achieved by the manuscript makers from whom he likewise sought inspiration, and in his intense love for all that was Mediaeval he failed to realize that all might not share his passion. In Mr. Ricketts's type there is a boldness and a precision of outline not found in the Kelmscott books, for, as he himself has said, he conceived his types as forms cut in metal and in his study of the early printers' books he felt "that sense of logic, balance, and control which characterised the Renaissance itself."

Meanwhile, when the Kelmscott Press was broken up shortly after Morris's death, the Guild of Handicraft of which Mr. C. R. Ashbee was the leading spirit, purchased two of Morris's hand-presses. Up to that time the Guild had not included printing among its crafts, because in view of the work done by the Kelmscott and the Vale presses, Mr. Ashbee felt that a new attempt in that direction would seem "almost an impertinence," but when

Morris died the possibility of a press presented itself in a new light. The first books issued at this new Essex House Press were in Caslon type. In 1901 and 1903, respectively, Mr. Ashbee's Endeavour and Prayer Book Types appeared, both of which adhere more closely to the characteristics of manuscript lettering than any other type designed during the "Revival."

In 1901, the first book was issued from the newly established Doves Press, founded by two of Morris's most intimate associates, Mr. T. J. Cobden-Sanderson and Mr. Emery Walker. The type which, like Morris's, was modelled after Jenson's has a certain luminous quality — a combination of delicacy and firmness which, both in type-design and in presswork, shows the hand of a master. Surrounding the text is a wealth of margin. In proportion it does not seem to differ materially from that used by all printers of beautiful books. It is seemingly more liberal because of the square octavo page characteristic of the Doves Press books, and its whiteness is emphasized by the gray block of text, unbroken by ornament, and embellished with only an occasional, simple initial-letter so carefully placed that the line of margin is undisturbed.

This press was founded "to attack the problem of pure Typography" and unfortunately, for booklovers, the notes of its death song have already sounded. Various masterpieces of literary thought have meanwhile been produced; for Mr. Cobden-Sanderson believes that "Whether by the Doves Press or some other Press or Presses, such monumental production, expressive of man's admiration, is a legitimate ambition and a public duty. Great thoughts deserve and demand a great setting."

Although not so frequently mentioned as some others, the name of Emery Walker should be among those most honored in the "Revival of Printing." It was to him, we are told, that Morris confided his ideals and hopes when opening his Press, and to him that Morris went for counsel, relying much upon his taste and sympathetic understanding of the project. As early as 1888, Mr. Walker published an essay on fine printing and he was one with Morris in the early attempt to print satisfactory books at the Chiswick Press. A year after he had entered into partnership with Mr. Cobden-Sanderson at the Doves Press, Mr. Walker it is said assisted in designing the exceedingly beautiful fount, based on Sweynheim and Pannartz, for Mr. Hornby's Ashdene Press at Chelsea. The Ashdene Press has made an additional of dialect to become fixed firmly on the national tongue, Caxton — not by introducing the printing press but by determining that the English press should disseminate works in the English language — performed a service of inestimable importance to English literature. That Caxton had a keen appreciation of good usage in language we know from his references to his efforts to improve his own vocabulary by finding out exactly what words mean and how they should be used. Born, as he acknowledges in his first publication, in a part of Kent where “I doubt not is spoken as broad and rude English as is in any place in Englonde,” and living for thirty years “for the most parte in the contres of Braband, Flandres, Holand, and Zeland,” he not unnaturally felt keenly his own lack of facility and accuracy in the use of his mother tongue. His own everyday speech may well have been a conglomerate of all the languages of northern Europe, commingled with some school Latin, with each of which he certainly had at least sufficient acquaintance to serve his purposes as merchant & traveller. What he could hardly have realised was that the English which he spoke had been influenced by personal experiences not unlike the race experiences which have given us the marvellously flexible and incomparably expressive language of English literature. ¶ Caxton was always ready for a discussion of the minutiae of literary usage, although as he remarks in the Blanchardin contribution to the movement in the happy combination of colored initials with printed text.

Another press which has come to take a prominent place in the "Revival of Printing" was started by Lucien Pissarro at Epping. Pissarro was originally a wood engraver of Eragny, Normandy, who took up the study of typography in the early nineties. In 1896, he began the publication of books in the Vale type, through the courtesy of Mr. Ricketts. Seven years later, together with his wife, he brought forth their first book in the Brook Type, "A Brief Account of the Origin of the Eragny Press." Naturally the possibility of decorating their books with woodcuts made a strong appeal. The quaint, personal quality of their illustrations and ornaments is often very attractive, especially in cases where the woodcuts are hand-colored.

In America, Mr. Bruce Rogers who was then at the Riverside Press, and Mr. D. Berkeley Updike of the Merrymount Press were first to feel the influence of the "Revival." The names of both are frequently included among those of the printers of this school of private presses. Yet they may almost be said to have started a school of their own, for theirs was the happy faculty of absorbing the real essence of the "Revival" and of translating it at once into terms of commercial printing; with the result, that their books combine real charm with what is at the same time practicable in every sense of the word. The same might now be said of a score of other presses in America, and of equally conspicuous British houses, which have since applied the laws of fine printing to the regular trade and have bettered the product of their presses according to the measure of their success in understanding its principles. Like every movement of its kind, the "Revival of Printing" has attracted a host of followers, many of whom, seeing the truth underlying it all, are striving to achieve in spite of certain handicaps. Others, seeing merely the superficial, have caught at various characteristics and stereotyped them into meaningless convention.

The remarkable thing is that those presses which may properly be said to belong to the "Revival of Printing," besides following the laws deduced by their "master-printer," have each made some individual contribution to the movement. In this way, possibly more than in any other, is shown the power of Morris's influence. He looked to the Past for inspiration, and gaining it combined with it his own personality in his Kelmscott books. And through him as interpreter and guide, the printers of his school have been able not only to take the best from the Past and to carry out his ideals for the Book Beautiful, but to add to this heritage something of themselves.

Occasionally a few books belonging to the "Revival" appear in an auction room or are listed in a bookseller's catalogue. A certain number are recorded annually in Slater, Karslake and American Book-Prices Current. Not many copies are on the market, however, because the books were issued in limited edition and many of them are still on the shelves of their original purchasers. The prices which these books command, although not as yet prohibitive, raise them above the reach of the average buyer and give them place in the libraries of those booklovers who have sufficient means to rank as collectors.

The Public Library, striving to meet demands for the latest books on the War, and for up-to-date works of science and economics, can hardly be expected to devote even a portion of its income to the purchase of books whose value to the public is more as works of art than for actual utility. Yet, if the Library is to fulfill its function of making available to the public the knowledge of the great achievements in the world's development, it needs these books. It must rely, then, upon the generosity of its friends.

Fortunately, in our own case, several of the finest specimens among the books of the "Revival" have already found their way to our shelves, but their number is very few.

It is not possible nor desirable for the printer at the commercial press to live up to the rather fastidious standards of the "Revival" itself. The type designed for these presses, for instance, is beautiful when examined letter by letter, but on the full page printed without leading and with little space between the words, as is characteristic of the majority of their books, it cannot be read with ease. The use of a small leaf or ornament between sentences to mark a change in thought and yet avoid breaking the text into paragraphs, which has rather aptly been described as a "glorified full-stop," gives an even tone of color to the page which is pleasing enough in itself. In continuous reading, the eye becomes wearied of the unbroken pages and longs for the occasional short line and the space at the end of the paragraph. And again, the elaborate initial letters and ornamental borders which adorn many of these books are graceful in design and admirably executed, though hardly suited to the subject matter or character of the average books of today. Morris printed Mediaeval subjects in a Mediaeval way, which was most fitting, but any one of his charming ornamental initials printed by machinery and interjected into a modern page of Caslon would be anything but appropriate.

It is such peculiarities, however, which first strike the eye as it surveys the books of the "Revival," and which appeal as strongly to the dilettante as they rebuff the more practically minded. The dilettante snatches at these superfluities and copies them until they lose whatever of beauty and meaning they originally possessed. The other rejects the books en masse and, without seeing beyond the surface, condemns them as specimens of a passing fad. Whereas, back of it all there are certain laws of book-building which these books exemplify and it is these laws re-discovered and practised by the "Revival" which have had so striking an influence upon modern bookmaking.

Individual letters of pure form, grouped in words which are separated by enough space to be quite distinct from one another; ink, in full black, carefully distributed, and printed with even impression; paper of good quality; sufficient margin to set off the text; illustrations or ornaments not incongruous with the subject matter and so placed that the harmony and balance of the two pages of the open book are not destroyed — these are the hallmarks of a book well printed. These are laws which apply to every book — whether printed from specially designed type on hand-made paper, or in linotype on commercial paper.

Swift's "Advice to Grub-Street Writers,"

"Get all your verses printed fair,
Then let them well be dried,
And Curll must have a special care
To leave the margin wide," is all very well so far as it goes. It leads rather to Dibdin's love for "tall copies" than to the real truth of the matter. It is not the width of the margin which makes a book attractive. It is its proportionate width. It must not be so narrow in proportion to the text that the book has a cropped and shorn appearance. On the other hand, it must not be so wide that the text seems lost in a mass of over-conspicuous white. There is a happy mean between these two extremes, and it is only when this point is reached that real beauty is attained.

The laws of symmetry, balance and rhythm underly all art and one or more are essential in the make-up of every object which is truly beautiful.

In book-building the application of these laws is perhaps not so obvious as in some forms of art, yet nevertheless they obtain here as elsewhere — symmetry, in exactness of arrangement and in accurate spacing; balance, in the nice arrangement of text and margin, so that the two pages of the open book form an artistic whole; and rhythm in the even impression of type and harmonious relation between the type and whatever of ornament or illustration the book contains, so that as the leaves are turned, page by page, the effect is that of a harmonious mass of gray set in relief by the surrounding white of the margins.

Whether Morris created the spirit of our time or whether he was himself the product of his time, it would be hard to determine, especially from so close a perspective. That the yeast was already at work we know. DeVinne and William Blades had long been writing upon the history of typography. On the Continent, a similar interest was manifest. Ruskin and Oscar Wilde had earnestly sought Truth and Simplicity as the essence of Beauty. Other printers, besides Morris, had tried to apply these principles to book-building and had been confronted with the unyielding methods of commercial printing in the late nineteenth century. But it was Morris who first dared to brush aside these conditions and to go to the root of the matter for himself.

Whatever its cause, dating from about 1900, a change seems gradually to have come over the spirit of our printing. Beauty may be found not only among the sumptuous books issued by booklovers' societies and clubs, but in those from the majority of English and American publishing houses, not to mention similar specimens of fine printing published outside these two countries. We rarely see the cheap octavo with its cramped and oftentimes blurred type printed on inferior paper, which in its day served the purpose of making good literature available at a small cost. Today, our publishing houses find it possible to give us, at a low figure, books of a clear, readable type, well spaced and evenly printed upon paper of a considerably better grade. Instead of books illustrated, we have illustrated books and there is as wide a chasm between the artistic value of these terms as the distance between the poles. Instead of half-tones on dissimilar paper, line-cut drawings are often used. Even in our passing books of fiction, the text is surrounded by a pleasing width of margin. Not infrequently the margins at the outer sides and bottom are a bit wider than at the top above the running title — and even the fraction of an inch added to the space below the text adds grace and beauty to the printed page.

It was William Morris who maintained, after studying the works of the master printers, that a book to be beautiful must be "architectural" in its build. It is undoubtedly to the influence of his Kelmscott books, and of those produced by the printers of the subsequent "Revival of Printing," that we owe much of the improved appearance of our books today. These private presses, through years of endeavor, produced books which are the modern exponent of the best that had been achieved in the history of printing. It remained for the commercial printer only to study their methods and to adopt whatever he found feasible, if he would raise the standard of his press.

MARY WRIGHT PLUMMER

Principal, Library School, The New York Public Library, 1911-1916
President, American Library Association, 1915-1916

MARY WRIGHT PLUMMER

MISS MARY WRIGHT PLUMMER, until recently the Principal of the Library School of The New York Public Library, died September 21, 1916, at the home of her brother in Dixon, Illinois.

Miss Plummer was born in Richmond, Indiana. She studied at Wellesley College and later at Columbia University, where she was a member of the first class to study library science in this country or in the world. From 1896 to 1904 she was the Librarian of Pratt Institute Free Library of Brooklyn, and the Director of Pratt Institute Library School from 1896 to 1911. When the Library School of The New York Public Library was opened in 1911, Miss Plummer became its Principal, a position which she held until her health failed early in the summer of 1916. She was President of the American Library Association, 1915 to 1916, and her presidential address, "The Public Library and the Pursuit of Truth," read at the national conference of the Association at Asbury Park, in June of this year, attracted much interest and favorable comment. She was the second woman to hold the position of President of the American Library Association, having been Vice President in 1900 and 1911. She had also held the presidency of the New York State Library Association, the New York Library Club, and the Long Island Library Club. In 1900 Miss Plummer was a delegate from this country to the International Congress of Libraries at the Paris Exposition.

In addition to her position in library work in this country, Miss Plummer was the author of a volume of "Verses," "Stories from the Chronicle of the Cid," two books of travel for children, — "Roy and Ray in Mexico," and "Roy and Ray in Canada," — and the compiler of a work on "Contemporary Spain."

A HISTORY OF THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

THE history of the Library, by Mr. Lydenberg, of which the first part was printed in the Bulletin for July 1916, is temporarily discontinued. A search for more data concerning the later parts of the history has made this postponement necessary. The concluding parts, describing the Tilden Trust, and the New York Free Circulating Library, will appear in early numbers of the Bulletin. After that, it is planned to publish the whole history in separate form.

NEWS OF THE MONTH

GIFTS

DURING the month of September the Library received as gifts a total of 1,317 volumes, 3,560 pamphlets, 28 maps, and 2 prints. The following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of these gifts: From Mrs. James B. Sheridan of New York, the Library received volumes 1 to 6 of "The Press," Philadelphia (August, 1857 - June, 1863); from Sir William Osler of Oxford, England, a copy of "Creators, transmuters, and transmitters as illustrated by Shakespeare, Bacon, and Burton, remarks made at the opening of the Bodley Shakespeare Exhibition, April 24, 1916, by William Osler"; from Mr. John Osborne Austin of Providence, R. I., one of ten copies printed of the Memorial Edition of his work, "A modern love chase, Peggy Rogers, An incompetent," Rahway, N. J.; from Mr. C. Graham Botha of Cape Town, Africa, a copy of his pamphlet, "Some early exploring expeditions and travels in South Africa," Cape Town, 1916; from M. Victor Bouillier of Paris, a copy of his work, "Georg Christoph Lichtenberg (1742-1799), Essai sur sa vie et ses oeuvres littéraires," Paris, 1914; from Mr. Frederick S. Myrtle of San Francisco, a copy of his work, "Gold, a forest play," San Francisco, 1916; from the Carnegie Corporation of New York, a copy of its privately printed publication, "Abstract of laws relating to libraries in force in 1915 in the states and territories of the United States," April, 1916; from Mr. William G. DeWitt of New York, a miscellaneous collection of books and periodicals, containing 153 volumes and 95 pamphlets; from Mr. Arthur Falkenau of New York, a collection of engineering books and periodicals, containing 42 volumes, 13 pamphlets, and 26 unbound periodicals; from Miss Katharine Hardie of New York, a miscellaneous collection of 115 volumes, 21 pamphlets, and a box of newspaper clippings; and from Mrs. C. L. McCord of Millbrook, N. Y., 20 volumes of periodicals published in the interests of the Society of Friends.

ADDITIONS AND USE OF THE LIBRARY IN SEPTEMBER, 1916

DURING the month of September, 1916, there were received at the Library 11,868 volumes and 4,264 pamphlets. (These figures include the additions to both Reference and Circulation Departments.) The total number of readers recorded in the Central Building was 61,990. They consulted 171,992 volumes. Visitors to the building numbered 174,525.

PAGEANTS, UNITED STATES

GENERAL WORKS

*"Time who doth bind men with his chain of years, Fate who doth make all life to bloom and close,
Death, who doth reap for Time and Fate: these three Wage war against the starry crown of song,
And stand in dreaded leaguer, with drawn swords
Before the garden where the Rose of Art,
Like a blown flame hath being and delight.
But here, behold a miracle: Time sleeps,
Fate nods; and Death hath had his will. Tonight
The centuries, like pages of a book,
Turn backward, and the Rose of Art doth breathe
With a new perfume springtides long forgot."*

RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Cathcart, William Hutton. The value of science in the smithy and forge. Edited by John Edward Stead... Prefatory note by Professor Archibald Barr... London: C. Griffin & Co., Ltd., 1916. xiv, 163 p. illus. 12°. VNG

This little book from the pen of the president of the Associated Foremen Smiths of Scotland, does not teach practical methods of doing work, but treats of laws and principles, covering such subjects as the calculations for forgings, strength of materials, development of surfaces, practical geometry, mechanics, heat, metallography, heat treatment of iron and steel, the chemistry of welding, and the theory of case-hardening.

Reviewed in Iron and coal trades review, July 19, 1916, p. 45.

Flinn, Alfred Douglas, and others, compilers. Waterworks handbook, compiled by Alfred Douglas Flinn... Robert Spurr Weston... and Clinton Lathrop Bogert... New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. ix, 824 p., 1 table. illus. 8°. VDL

A treatise of over 800 pages on the sources of water, its collection, transportation, delivery, distribution, and treatment.

"This book gives a usable compilation of information, old and new, for the waterworks engineer and superintendent, the designer, constructor, operator and inspector. The materials have been accumulated by the compilers in the course of their practice in various branches of waterworks engineering. The user is assumed to have some familiarity with mathematics, hydraulics, the natural sciences and waterworks construction, operation and maintenance, and to possess ordinary mathematical tables."—Preface.

Goethals, George Washington, editor. The Panama canal, an engineering treatise; a series of papers covering in full detail the technical problems involved in the construction of the Panama canal... prepared by engineers and other specialists in charge of the various branches of the work and presented at the International Engineering Congress, San Francisco, California, 1915... New York: McGraw-Hill Book Company, 1916. 2 v. illus. 8°. TSB

The name of the editor is sufficient to reflect the merit of these twenty-five authoritative monographs. Gen. Goethals himself has written an excellent historical introduction, also a chapter on the dry excavation of the canal. Professor Emory R. Johnson's paper covers the commercial and trade aspects; and Mr. Donald MacDonald outlines the geological features. There are four papers relating to sanitation, municipal engineering, water supply, climatology and hydrology, and two chapters on the working force and the purchase of supplies. The remainder, and greater part of the work, has to do with the actual engineering operations, including the reconstruction of the Panama Railroad, with chapters on shops, terminals, drydocks, coaling plants, and aids to navigation. Provided with a map, over fifty plates of details, and several tables. A complete and noteworthy book which should prove of interest not only to the engineer but in many ways to the general reader as well.

Reviewed in Engineering news, Aug. 17, 1916, p. 309.

Judge, Arthur William. The design of aeroplanes... London: Whittaker and Co., 1916. viii, 212 p., 2 pl. illus. 8°. VDY

"The aeroplane has rapidly developed a literature of its own, and though this for a time consisted largely of popular description, of little use to the engineer or designer, the last year or two has witnessed the publication of one or two excellent textbooks, which must have proved a boon to draughtsmen and manufacturers. To these the present volume is a welcome addition. It presents in a simple yet brief form the principles underlying the design of aeroplanes from the standpoint of the mechanical engineer, and tabulates in a convenient form some of the data which experience has shown to be useful in design work. The author does not claim to treat every branch of the subject in full, and the frankness of this admission precludes criticism of what might by some be regarded as shortcomings. The book contains a great deal of information which the practical designer will find of service and we have pleasure in recommending it. To prevent misconception... we ought, perhaps, to add that the subject matter is strictly confined to the aeroplane proper, and does not deal in any way with the construction of the propelling motor."—Mechanical engineer, June 30, 1916, p. 495.

Also reviewed in Aeronautics, July 19, 1916, p. 38.

Mitchell, Charles Ainsworth, and T. C. HEPWORTH. Inks, their composition and manufacture, including methods of examination and a full list of English patents. Second edition, thoroughly revised, re-set. London: C. Griffin & Co., Ltd., 1916. xvi, 266 p. illus. 12°. VOP

Inasmuch as this comprehensive little treatise traces the history of writing and printing inks, and has something to say about the fading of manuscripts, the detection of forged documents, with information concerning safety and sympathetic inks, it should prove of interest not only to the student and manufacturer, but to the general reader as well.

Plucknett, Frank. Introduction to the theory and practice of boot and shoe manufacture... London: Longmans, Green and Co., 1916. xiv, 322 p. illus. 8°. (Longmans' technical handicraft series.) VMK

The author, who has had considerable experience in teaching this subject in England, states that the book is intended not only for technical students, but also for a "large circle of those who are interested in the rapid modern developments of the industry, and who have not the advantages of technical instruction." Scope is limited to the usual lines of work, omitting hand operations when the corresponding operations are more efficiently performed by a machine. There are chapters on the anatomy of the foot, foot measurements, lasts, and a comparison of English, French and American measurements.

Radcliffe, William Hiram. Home study course in practical electricity. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. 3 v. 8°.

VGC

These three volumes, comprising an up-to-date revision, with new illustrations, of 1400 questions and answers originally published in Power during the years 1905-1912, are intended for young men starting in the electrical business, "power station men, engineers, electricians and operators of electrical machinery who have not acquired a fundamental knowledge of their work."

Reviewed in Power, Aug. 1, 1916, p. 187.

Riach, M. A. S. Air-screws; and introduction to the aerofoil theory of screw propulsion. London: C. Lockwood & Son, 1916. viii, 128 p., 1 pl. illus. 8°.

VDY

Based on a series of articles in Aeronautics. Follows the method of Drzewieski, which is claimed to be approximately correct within certain limits. Although the book bristles with higher mathematics, it is stated that the non-mathematical reader "may be able to follow the train of reasoning, at any rate as far as its qualitative nature is concerned."

Zimmer, George Frederick. The mechanical handling & storing of material; being a treatise on the handling and storing of material such as grain, coal, ore, timber, etc., by automatic or semi-automatic machinery, together with the various accessories used in the manipulation of such plant... London: C. Lockwood and Son, 1916. xiv, 752 p. illus. 4°.

VFG

Second edition of this carefully written and complete work exceeds the first edition by over 200 pages, and represents considerable revision and the introduction of the new subject of storing. Exceptionally well printed and illustrated. A useful table giving weights of various materials is given on pages 726-728.

"The 1916 edition of this well-known treatise may deservedly be described as a magnum opus of the very first order. The work and experience of the author had long ago accorded him a well-earned position amongst the experts in this particular branch of engineering; but, unlike the majority of such experts, he has not rested to preserve his knowledge under the seal of secrecy, but has laid it at the disposal of the mechanical world in a volume characterized throughout by interest and completeness... The facts and matter are put forward in a manner which must command the approval of all those who want to go straight to the point without being engulfed in a series of antiquated records of mere historic interest." — Gas world, June 24, 1916, p. 615.

Also reviewed in Iron and coal trades review, July 14, 1916, p. 45; in Electrician, July 14, 1916, p. 503; in Mining magazine, June, 1916, p. 353.

Burgess, Ernest W. The function of socialization in social evolution. Chicago: University of Chicago Press [1916]. vii, 237 p. 8°.

SC

"The factors in social evolution are reducible to three: geography, heredity, and socialization... The thesis of this essay is that socialization, rather than either geography or heredity, is the dominant factor in social evolution. The evidence for this position is presented in the study of the factors involved in discovery and invention, in social progress, and in personal development." — Preface.

Gallichan, Walter M. The great unmarried. London: T. W. Laurie, Ltd. [1916?] 224 p. 8°.

SNV

One of the results of the present high cost of living is the postponement of marriage, or even lifelong celibacy. This book is a consideration of the causes and the social and economic aspects of celibacy, and of the remedy for it.

Goodnow, Frank Johnson. Principles of constitutional government. New York: Harper & Brothers [cop. 1916]. 396 p. 8°.

SEF

Based upon lectures delivered at Peking University while the author was legal adviser to the Chinese government, describing the conceptions and forms of constitutional government in various countries. The constitutions of the United States, France, Germany, Belgium and Japan are given in appendices.

Hennessy, John A. What's the matter with New York? A story of the waste of millions, told by John A. Hennessy. New York: The O'Connell Press [1916]. 159 p., 1 diagr. 8°.

TIF

That the expenditures of the state government are out of proportion to the results attained is a notorious fact, according to Mr. Hennessy. That this situation is the result of inefficient management is more than a suspicion. The last legislature was only prevented from levying a direct tax, to be paid largely by New York City, by strong protests, and the attempt will undoubtedly be made again.

The purpose of this book is to show a few of the ways in which public money is wasted; among them the prisons, asylums and state hospitals, highways, printing, and natural resources.

Off., 1916. 265 p. 8°. (United States.—Foreign and Domestic Commerce Bureau. Special agents series. no. 119.) Econ. Div.

"The information presented in this report covers all forms of state aid to shipping, and attention has been called not only to subsidies and subventions but also to the various forms of indirect government assistance, such as the reservation of the coasting trade to national ships, exemptions from import duties, port dues, and taxation, the privilege of using foreign built ships, preferential railroad rates, and loans to shipowners."

Knoepfel, Charles Edward. Industrial preparedness. New York: The Engineering Magazine Co., 1916. vi, ii, 145 p. 12°. (Industrial management library.) TAH

The military, political, and industrial organization of the United States has recently been extensively discussed. The author of this book maintains that all our organization is inefficient and invites disaster. As an object lesson he describes the military and industrial organization of Germany and shows how the lesson may be applied in this country.

Manual of compensation and liability insurance. Rules and rates. New York: Workmen's Compensation Service Bureau [1916]. 2 p.l., 3-53 p., 55-152 f. 12°. TDO

Meloney, William Brown. The heritage of Tyre. New York: Macmillan Co., 1916. 3 p.l., 180 p., 1 pl. 16°. (Our national problems.) TR

A short history of the American merchant marine. A large part of the book is about the day of the clipper ship, showing how America held the foremost place on the sea for many years. How this pre-eminence was lost through the indifference of the country and of the government is the theme of the remainder of the book. The policy of the Wilson administration is severely criticized.

Moulton, Harold Glenn. Principles of money and banking. Chicago: University of Chicago Press [cop. 1916]. xl, 502 p. 8°. TF

This book is a collection of material used in a course in banking at the University of Chicago. It is a combination of text-book and collateral reading, consisting of introductory remarks on each topic, followed by selections from various economic writers.

Myrick, Herbert. The federal farm loan system. New method of farm mortgage finance, under national supervision. A practical manual upon organizing and conducting national farm loan associations, also joint stock land banks. Showing how farmers, investors, bankers and the public may obtain the fullest benefit of the system. Including full text of the federal farm loan act. New York: O. Judd Co., 1916. 9 p.l., 7-239 p., 1 pl. 12°. THF

National Foreign Trade Council. European economic alliances. A compilation of information on international commercial policies after the European war and their effect upon the foreign trade of the United States. New York: National Foreign Trade Council, 1916. 118 p., 2 tables. 8°. Econ. Div.

Contains articles on the evolution of European commercial policy, 1815-1915, the Paris conference resolutions, the economic alliance of the central powers, European commercial treaty relations, with a chart showing existing treaties, and American foreign trade affected by the allied conference, with a chart showing commercial relations of the United States with the belligerent countries.

Orth, Samuel P., compiler. Readings on the relation of government to property and industry. Boston: Ginn and Co. [cop. 1915.] viii, 664 p. 8°. SB

A selection of articles, mainly from legal periodicals, on the changing conceptions of property and the functions of government, the police power, corporations and public utilities, labor laws, and tendencies toward federal control of commerce and industry.

Parmelee, Maurice Farr. Poverty and social progress. New York: Macmillan Co., 1916. xv p., 2 l., 3-477 p. 8°. SG

Part 1 is introductory, containing two chapters on the organization of society and pathological social conditions. Causes and conditions of poverty is the title of part 2, which takes up first the biological factors, and second, the economic factors of the problem of poverty; such as, the distribution of wealth and income, standard of living, unemployment, sweating system, and the relation of population to poverty.

Part 3 is concerned with remedial and preventive measures. The various methods of alleviating poverty are described, but held to be palliatives only. The abolition of poverty depends upon a democratic society, politically and economically so well organized that poverty cannot exist.

---

THESE papers are based upon four informal lectures given to an audience composed of the librarians of small libraries and of library assistants. They were part of a series of lectures held in this Library, under direction of the Library School. Miss Plummer, the late Principal of the School, wished to give the visiting librarians some discussion of the literary and human aspects of library work, rather than of its routine. Other lecturers spoke about modern poetry and fiction, book-illustration, and the drama. Printed here, these articles are primarily addressed to such an audience as that for which they were originally prepared. I do not pretend to offer much that will be new to the librarians of large and scholarly libraries, but in the material which I collected, perhaps there is something to interest any reader of the Bulletin.

IN these talks we shall discuss some of the faults and merits of book-reviewing as it is done to-day, and as it interests librarians. Its importance to librarians will be emphasized; but it may be taken for granted that they are interested in all that pertains to books and reading. It is necessary for a librarian to read book-reviews, and to get all the help which she can get from them, but it is especially undesirable for her to depend too much upon them. She must know how to review books for herself, and must not always accept as final the judgment of any other reviewer, no matter in what publication he writes.

To make these points, I shall speak to-day of the present condition of book-reviewing in this country. At the next lecture, we can talk about the history of book-reviewing in England and about some of the contemporary reviews. After that, the history of reviewing in the United States, and our present book-reviewing periodicals. The fourth lecture will consider the different classes of book-reviews, the processes of getting a book reviewed, and the minor subject of book annotation.

“There are five groups interested in literary criticism: publishers of books, authors, publishers of reviews, critics, and finally, the reading public.” This classification was made by an essayist in the Atlantic Monthly half a dozen years ago. You will see at once that he has left us out of the reckoning entirely, — he pays librarians not even the bare compliment of mention. All the persons in these five groups, by the way, are accustomed to leave librarians out of their reckoning, — all but the publishers of books, at any rate. When a writer, or a critic, is speaking of literary or bookish folk he never mentions librarians. This is a strange thing, — librarians who do nothing but collect, preserve and distribute books are thought of as a sort of class apart from all others who deal with literature. What is the reason for this? Are librarians themselves partly to blame? Have they so busied themselves with the machinery of their profession, have they been so much interested in the methods of collecting, preserving and distributing books that the impression has gone abroad that they have no time to open the covers, and finally, no inclination to do so, even if they had time? You and I are indignant at this charge; we know that we read books and love them. But, we must admit that the mistaken view is rather widely held, and that few writers in naming the various kinds of people interested in books, remember to include librarians.

To be quite honest we must also remember that some of our colleagues seem wholly concerned with getting libraries (i. e., the buildings) constructed; with buying, cataloguing, and lending books. They boast that they have no time to read anything but the “literature of the profession.” The Lord forgive them for that use of the word “literature”! At last, they come to look upon any kind of book, except a code of library rules, as too trivial for a librarian to read. I am sure you all have seen librarians caught reading a book, and looking as guilty as a boy stealing apples.

Nevertheless we must correct the error of that Atlantic essayist (he was Charles Miner Thompson, the editor of The Youth's Companion), we must correct his error, and include librarians in the class of those interested in book-reviews, as well as in books.

He said "interested in literary criticism." The subject of these talks is "book-reviews." The terms are sometimes used as if interchangeable, so it may be well to establish the distinction at the outset.

It is not always easy to draw the line between them, — indeed, it is certain that both in what I quote and in what I have to say myself, the terms "criticism" and "literary criticism" will occasionally enter. Yet every one of us recognizes the difference between a "reviewer of books" and a "literary critic." Probably there are youths or maidens so ingenuous and callow that as soon as they write a book-review or two for the local newspaper, will refer to themselves as "literary critics," — just as the member of a board of aldermen might fancy himself a "statesman."

Book-reviewing is, of course, a humble branch of literary criticism. It is an entirely honorable occupation or diversion, but it does not confer upon its practitioner the dignity of the acknowledged critic. The literary critic is presumably a man of learning. He weighs the written products of the centuries, and is seldom concerned with the books of the week.

The reviewer, on the other hand, need not be, and often had better not be, a person of profound scholarship. He must have a good education, to be sure; he must be well read. But, supposing that he can write at all, he can pass a satisfactory judgment on Barrie's latest comedy without quoting Aristotle's "Poetics"; he can compose a sensible paragraph about a volume of verse by some contemporary poet without having Boileau at his fingers' ends; and he can deal with the average novel of to-day, and render an opinion which will serve the usual intelligent reader, even if he is not perfectly familiar with the theories of their art held by Flaubert and his disciple, Maupassant. There are not half a dozen genuine literary critics in this country to-day; some persons would probably say there is not one. But perhaps even the most severe commentators on the state of our book-criticism would admit that there are scores of persons who can write decent reviews.

To sum up, then, the difference between book-reviewing and literary criticism, — here it is, practically in the words of Professor Brander Matthews: The aim of book-reviewing is to engage in discussion of our contemporaries. It is a department of journalism, and must be carefully distinguished from criticism, which is a department of literature.

I said that those who comment upon the state of book-reviewing in America — in other words, those who review the reviewer — might argue that there are scores of persons who can write fairly good book-reviews. But is this correct? Are they even so lenient as this?

It happens that the state of American book-reviewing has been under consideration to an unusual degree, within a few years. Two articles by Bliss Perry (in the Yale Review, for July and for October, 1914), started the discussion. But as the essay by Mr. Thompson, to which I have already referred, antedates Mr. Perry's articles by six years, let me quote from that, first. Mr. Thompson finds little that is good. All five of the groups of persons, which he cited, are, says he, discontented with the present condition of American criticism, —

"Publishers of books complain that reviews do not help sales. Publishers of magazines lament that readers do not care for articles on literary subjects. Publishers of newspapers frankly doubt the interest of book-notices. The critic confesses that his occupation is ill-considered and ill-paid. The author wrathfully exclaims — but what he exclaims cannot be summarized, so various is it. Thus, the whole commercial interest is unsatisfied. The public, on the other hand, finds book-reviews of little service and reads them, if at all, with indifference, with distrust, or with exasperation. That part of the public which appreciates criticism as an art maintains an eloquent silence and reads French."<sup>1</sup>

And now, as we have added a sixth group — librarians — it may be said that they also complain about book-reviews. They complain for the same reason as Mr. Thompson's "reading public," because they often find book-reviews of little service, and they complain for another reason, — that of timeliness. In other words, the average book-review appears weeks, if not months, after the librarian really needs it. Since this is a practical difficulty, rather than an intellectual one, it is sometimes disregarded.

The harassed librarian or library assistant, with a score of her readers demanding a new book, may be in doubt as to whether it is one she ought to buy. Now is the time for a book-review whose advice she may follow. Under these circumstances she would rather have the opinion of some reviewer with common-sense, given to her when it would be useful, than the solemn and final judgment of the greatest living authority upon that subject — whatever it is — delivered like a decision of the Supreme Court, anywhere from eighteen months to three years after the publication of the book. And she is quite right.

So we will add librarians to the list of those interested in book-reviews, and stipulate promptness as a quality which they may justly demand in book-reviewing.

§ 4

What do the critics of book-reviewing say is the matter? Well, here is the leading indictment from the most eminent and most recent of them. I quote directly from Mr. Bliss Perry's article "Literary Criticism in American Periodicals" (Yale Review, July, 1914):

"We all agree that the status of literary criticism in America is unsatisfactory. Those of us who write books agree that it is only now and then, and by lucky accident, that our books are competently reviewed. We get praise enough, and sometimes blame enough — or nearly enough — but we do not often get real criticism. The reader and would-be buyer of books has great difficulty in discovering what new books are worth buying or reading. A generation ago one could often depend upon the local bookseller for this information, but, for well-known economic reasons, the old type of bookseller has in most towns been driven from business, and the young lady who arranges her hair behind the book-counter of the department store is obviously puzzled by your questions. If you turn to the newspapers for information about the twelve or thirteen thousand books published in this country every year, you find, it is true, a heroically compiled mass of book notices, — many of them composed, in their essential features, by the advertising clerks of the publishers who are trying to sell the books. There were never so many Saturday and Sunday literary supplements and other guides to the book buyer; but there was never, even in the Eighteen-Thirties, any less actual criticism in proportion to the number of books published. Here and there, there is a daily or weekly journal that endeavors, according to its abilities, to uphold and to apply critical standards. I need not name them, for they are rare enough to be generally known. Technical treatises, it is true, frequently meet with competent criticism in technical journals; although I have heard the editor of a scientific paper boast that he had dictated, in sixty minutes, reviews of eleven new scientific books, not one of which he had taken the trouble to read beyond the preface and the table of contents."

That last sentence is an illuminating comment upon the veneration which librarians sometimes lavish upon "technical journals," upon "scientific" and "expert" opinion!

In October of the same year, and in the same magazine, Mr. Perry considers "The American Reviewer" himself. Who is this reviewer, he asks? He quotes Mr. Thompson: "Commonly in the newspapers, and frequently in periodicals of some literary pretension, the writers of reviews are shiftless literary hacks, shallow, sentimental women, or crude young persons full of indiscriminate enthusiasm for all printed matter."

Thus it is phrased, bluntly and brusquely, by Mr. Thompson. We can find the thing said ever so much more effectively in "Pendennis." That is always the way, — if we wish facts, we go to a book of facts; but if we wish truth, we have to consult what we call fiction.

Pendennis, you will remember, in his London experiences, was a writer, journalist, poet, and book-reviewer. This is what Thackeray says of him:

"The courage of young critics is prodigious; they clamber up to the judgment seat, and, with scarce a hesitation, give their opinion upon works the most intricate or profound. Had Macaulay's History or Herschel's Astronomy been put before Pen at this period, he would have looked through the volumes, meditated his opinion over a cigar, and signified his august approval of either author, as if the critic had been their born superior and indulgent master and patron. By the help of the Biographie Universelle or the British Museum, he would be able to take a rapid résumé of a historical period, and allude to names, dates, and facts, in such a masterly, easy way, as to astonish his mamma at home, who wondered where her boy could have acquired such a prodigious store of reading, and himself, too, when he came to read over his articles two or three months after they had been composed, and when he had forgotten the subject and the books which he had consulted. At that period of his life Mr. Pen owns, that he would not have hesitated, at twenty-four hours' notice, to pass an opinion upon the greatest scholars, or to give a judgment upon the Encyclopaedia."

What Mr. Thompson has said of reviewers, says Mr. Perry, is true enough, no doubt, and yet the latter believes that there are "hundreds of reviewers of a better sort, college-trained young men and young women, who have some notions of literary standards, plenty of professional ambition, a tolerable skill in writing, and who would really like to do their best."

§ 5

Why don't they do it, you ask? Mr. Perry thinks it is commercialism, — the control of the advertising department over the literary page of the paper. The young reviewer often has his honest say, he admits, and so does many an older reviewer. And not all publishers and advertisers are disingenuous. But the control exists. The system is simple. Copies of all reviews are sent to the publisher: if these reviews tend to be unfavorable, the publisher will often cut down or threaten to cut down his advertising; and then the counting-room of the newspaper wants to know why the young reviewer cannot take a more "reasonable" attitude of mind. That is all: and if the reviewer's living is dependent upon his taking a "reasonable" view, he often surrenders. Here is an instance, cited by Mr. Perry:

"I am not, of course, putting a theoretical case. Any publisher's office or newspaper office has its own stories to tell. In fact, since I began to write these pages, I have stopped to listen to the adventures of a young newspaper man, a recent graduate of that joyous school of journalism, the Harvard Lampoon, who is now doing the literary and dramatic criticism for an evening paper in an inland city. This boy's amazed discovery that his light-hearted notices of certain very light fiction brought rebuking response from the publishers, from the manager of the local bookstore, and from the counting-room, was comic, and it would have been tragic if the Lampoon humorist had not demonstrated in other ways his value to his newspaper. But he does not joke any more about the advertisers: he has seen, in a flash of illumination, the relation between the far-away publishers and the weekly pay-envelope of the cub reviewer."

Aside from commercialism Mr. Perry declares that, compared with foreign periodical criticism, American book-reviewing lacks candor, it lacks trained intelligence, and it lacks distinction. It is often ambitious, — he cites a Holiday Number of the New York Times, with its "Review of the Hundred Best Books of the Year." But although the books were selected and described by a committee from the department of English of Columbia University, the performance "revealed the limitations of the amateur."

Let us discuss these two charges against American book-reviewing. First, there is the commercialism, the control of the literary page by the business manager; the muzzle placed upon a free expression of honest opinion by the power of the dollar. There can be little doubt that it exists. The testimony of men who ought to know is so strong; the antecedent probability is so much in its favor, that it cannot wholly be denied.

From personal experience I am unable to relate a single thrilling encounter with Mammon. During five or six years I have intermittently written reviews of various books for a newspaper which devotes to reviewing probably more space than any other journal in the country. It also carries a large amount of book-advertising. For a much shorter time I wrote reviews for one of the periodicals. Whether the editors were so impressed by my appearance of honesty that they thought it hopeless to tempt me, or whether they are not accustomed to try to tempt anyone, I will let you decide. But they never conveyed to me, directly or indirectly, that I should praise this book, or "go easy" on that book, because its publisher was a big advertiser with them. Nor was one line, nor one word, of adverse criticism, condemnation or ridicule ever deleted or altered in my reviews by the editorial "blue-pencil," — that mythical implement which all editors are supposed to keep handy. Perhaps my experiences were lucky: in fact, I know they were.

But it would be wrong to argue from this instance that there is no such thing as commercial influence on book-reviewing. In certain places it undoubtedly exists, — the testimony of experienced and widely-informed men is almost invariably in the affirmative. The man who buys space in newspapers and magazines, whether to advertise books, or patent medicines, or a department store, or a theatre, or a railroad, holds a weapon over the heads of the publishers. His power can be used — it frequently is used — as a subtle and effective kind of bribery, one of the new and refined forms of sin which our civilization has developed.

So this evil which affects us, is only a small manifestation of a very large national evil: the power which the advertiser holds to corrupt the press, and through the press to mislead public opinion. It is bad; it bothers us and troubles us to find that there are book-reviewing publications which can be muzzled or bought. But as we are citizens first, and librarians afterwards, it is absurd to lose the sense of proportion. It is foolish to explode with wrath over this matter and not to save any indignation for the larger damages which can be wrought. It would be ridiculous to think merely of venal book-reviews and to forget the children who are drugged and the wretched invalids who are humbugged because many publications do not dare tell the truth about patent medicines; or to forget the railroads and corporations which, by purchasing advertising space can and do buy editorial opinion, color the news, and poison at its source the information upon which we depend to govern our acts and votes.

There are two or three other considerations about this matter of commercialized book-reviewing. It cannot be defended for an instant, and yet it — or something — has come over the spirit of book-reviewing and made it kindlier and less given to the old-fashioned slashing attack. In the old days they sought to kill an author as far as literary reputation went. In one instance, — that of John Keats, which we shall consider with English book-reviewing, there were persons who believed that a review killed him in body as well as in spirit.

Thackeray describes an incident of the old-school criticism, in the novel previously quoted:

“The person of all most cruelly mauled was Pen himself. His verses had not appeared with his own name in the Spring Annual, but under an assumed signature. As he had refused to review the book, Shandon had handed it over to Mr. Bludyer, with directions to that author to dispose of it. And he had done so effectually. Mr. Bludyer, who was a man of very considerable talent, and of a race which, I believe, is quite extinct in the press of our time, had a certain notoriety in his profession, and reputation for savage humour. He smashed and trampled down the poor spring flowers with no more mercy than a bull would have on a parterre; and having cut up the volume to his heart’s content, went and sold it at a bookstall, and purchased a pint of brandy with the proceeds of the volume.”

Some of the persons who find fault with reviewing as it exists today, seem to imply that the all-important thing is that bad books should be blamed. They forget that it is equally important that good books should be praised and their authors encouraged.

In our every-day speech we have almost lost the primary meaning of the word “criticism.” We seldom think of it in its real sense, — a “judgment.” Almost invariably we use it in its third or fourth meaning: “harsh or unfavorable judgment.” I once observed a certain Freshman class in a college, whose members gave a curious illustration of this habit of thinking that there is only one kind of criticism, and that unfriendly. They were given, on an examination paper in English composition, an extract from a book, and told to criticise it, to comment upon the use of words, and so on. Now, the passage was an exquisite example of Stevenson’s style, — from the description of sleeping outdoors, in “Travels with a Donkey.” But the Freshmen did not know that; it was not labelled in any way. So they seized their fountain-pens as if they were harpoons, and proceeded to lay about them with a heavy hand. They tore that beautiful bit of English to shreds and tatters, and accused the author of every literary atrocity known to the text-book. They threw the fragments upon the ground — figuratively speaking — and danced upon them. Then they sat back and wondered why they didn't get better marks in the examination!

It is easy to smile at them, but are not all of us more or less like them? Do we not judge too much by external evidence, by the surroundings rather than the thing itself?<sup>1</sup> You will remember the dramatic critics in "Fanny's First Play," who stood about and positively refused to give any opinion about the play until they knew who had written it. It's absurd, they said, to ask us whether it is a good play or not. How can we tell, until we know the dramatist's name?

Has it ever occurred to you to wonder what might happen to some of the greatest classics of literature if they could suddenly appear to us unattended by their reputations? Suppose that the mighty name of Shakespeare was totally unknown, that the world had never seen nor heard of his plays. Then suppose that somebody discovered the plays and published them. I think I can see, in my mind's eye, some of the comments they would provoke in certain cautious publications. How the "sensationalism" of the last act of "Hamlet" would be deplored! Do you fancy that our Library Association's Book-List would approve "Othello"?

There is still another matter which it is well for librarians to remember. When we demand absolute frankness of criticism of books it may be wholesome for us to ask: do we get absolute frankness of criticism about our own work? Or do we get comment tempered and softened by the desire to speak kindly of our own colleagues and associates? So long as the latter is true, is it not a little unreasonable for us to expect a stern and uncompromising impartiality from writers of book-reviews, and from editors, toward the authors of books? For they — reviewers and editors — are often upon the same terms of association, acquaintance, or friendship with authors, as the writers in library magazines are with other librarians. Human nature has its way in both cases.

§ 8

Finally, it is important not to exaggerate the effect of an unfavorable book-review, nor to overestimate the publisher's fear of such a review. The publisher who wishes to sell his books in large numbers (we speak sometimes of this natural wish as if there were something reprehensible about it!) does not care a great deal whether one of his books is praised or blamed so long as it is not ignored. He would far rather see it given a column of stinging abuse than to have it turned off with a few lines of faint praise. I think you will agree that you would rather see a column of blame allotted to a book which you had written, than to feel that the critic and editor thought it was of no particular importance one way or the other. So far as commercial success is concerned, unfavorable reviews may now and then spoil a book's chance of success, as they certainly may help to ruin a play; but there are too many proofs that the popular novelist can laugh at the bitterest attacks which reviewers may make. Marie Corelli wore, like a sort of garland, whole pages of adverse criticism, sneering comment, ridicule and abuse. She pointed to her enormous sales, her thousands of readers, and her place firm in the hearts of the indiscriminating crowd. When one of Mrs. Florence Barclay's sweet-sweet novels was published, almost every newspaper in New York praised it. The conspicuous exception was the Evening Post. The publishers quoted a few lines of praise, some of it laid on exceedingly thick, from all these papers, then tacked to the end, in a prominent position, a few lines of ridicule from the Post, and printed the whole thing as an advertisement in a number of newspapers, including the Post itself.

---

<sup>1</sup> Since writing this I have heard a man say to a newspaper writer: "I didn't think much of those verses of yours, when they were in your own paper. When they were quoted in that other paper, I saw that they were mighty good."

§ 9

In regard to the other comment of Mr. Perry, about American book-reviewing — that it lacks candor, trained intelligence, and distinction — that is true, but not novel. Many of the attacks upon book-reviewing are unduly severe. Mr. Thompson, in the article in the Atlantic Monthly which I have quoted, was inclined to be rather strict with the book-reviewers, as well as with authors, who do not maintain the dignity of literature and keep small personalities about themselves out of print. A number of years ago, Professor Brander Matthews wrote an essay called "Literary Criticism and Book-Reviewing."<sup>1</sup> He speaks of those who make "... a three-fold assumption: — first, that it is the chief duty of the critic to tear the mask from impostors and to rid the earth of the incompetent; second, that the critics of the past accepted this obligation and were successful in its accomplishment; and third, that there is to-day, at the beginning of the twentieth century, a special need for this corrective criticism."

Mr. Matthews denies the truth of all these assumptions. His article is extremely sensible, and valuable to read in connection with Bliss Perry's indictments of book-reviewing. Although written some years before Mr. Perry's articles, it is in the nature of an answer to them, stating, as it does, the other side. He wrote in reply to a British author of a volume of Ephemera Critica, and at the beginning makes the distinction, which I have already quoted between book-reviews and literary criticism:

"The aim of book-reviewing is to engage in discussion of our contemporaries, and this is why book-reviewing, which is a department of journalism, must be carefully distinguished from criticism, which is a department of literature. This is why also we need not worry ourselves overmuch about the present condition of book-reviewing, since it has not all the importance which the British author of Ephemera Critica has claimed for it and since it can really have very little influence upon the future of literature. As a fact, the condition of book-reviewing is not now so lamentable as the British author has declared, and it is not indeed really worse than it was in earlier years; but it might be very much worse than it is, and very much worse than it ever was, without its having any unfortunate influence on the development of a single man of genius. Indeed, genius never more surely reveals itself as genius than in its ability to withstand the pressure of contemporary fashion and go on doing its own work in its own way."

In regard to the notion that there were so many great book-reviewers in the golden past, Mr. Matthews relates this experience:

"In my leisurely youth, when I had all the time there was, I bought a forty-year file of a London weekly of lofty pretensions and of a certain antiquity, since it has now existed for more than threescore years and ten; and in the course of a twelvemonth I turned every page of those solid tomes, not reading every line, of course, but not neglecting a single number. The book-reviewing was painfully uninspired, with little brilliancy in expression and with little insight in appreciation; it was disfigured by a certain smug complacency which I find to be still a characteristic of the paper whenever I chance now to glance at its pages. But as I worked through this contemporary record of the unrolling of British literature from 1830 to 1870, what was most surprising was the fact that only infrequently indeed did the book-reviewers bestow full praise on the successive publications which we now hold to be among the chief glories of the Victorian reign, and that the books most lavishly eulogized were often those that have now sunk into oblivion."

What kind of book-reviews does a librarian need so far as her own work is concerned? By that I mean, what kind will give her the readiest help when she is in doubt as to whether to buy a certain book or not? It is plain that she can scarcely use the graceful essay which must be read from beginning to end in order to find the critic's opinion. It should be rather short and concise. It is perhaps easier to find a satisfactory review of a work of fact, than of the various branches of imaginative literature, such as fiction, poetry, and the drama. After all, book-reviews of contemporary works in these classes of literature are not much more than expressions of personal opinion. And the personal opinion of a young man who will graduate from Columbia next year, or of a girl who graduated from Bryn Mawr last year, is not necessarily any more useful to us than our own judgment, supposing that we can get time and opportunity to form judgment. It is not necessarily decisive even though it comes to us through the pages of such respectable papers as The Nation or The Dial. This matter of opinion, of like and dislike in belles lettres is very difficult.

"Aubrey de Vere," wrote Professor Lounsbury,<sup>1</sup> "tells us of three conversations he held the very same day on the very same subject with three different authors. Two of them were men of great poetic genius, the third was a man of distinct poetic talent. The topic of discussion in each case was the poetry of Burns. The difference of opinion expressed struck him as remarkable. The first with whom he talked was Tennyson. 'Read the exquisite songs of Burns,' exclaimed that poet, 'in shape each of them has the perfection of the berry; in light the radiance of the dewdrop; you forget for its sake those stupid things, his serious pieces.'

"A little later in the day he met Wordsworth. Again the conversation fell on Burns. 'Wordsworth,' he writes, 'praised him even more vehemently than Tennyson had done, as the great genius who had brought poetry back to nature.' "Of course," he said in conclusion, "I refer to his serious efforts, such as 'The Cotter's Saturday Night'; those foolish little amatory songs of his one has to forget,"' On the evening of this same day he chanced to fall in with Henry Taylor. Him he told of the different views expressed by the two poets. The author of "Philip Van Artevelde," disposed of them both very summarily. 'Burns' exquisite songs and Burns' serious efforts are to me alike tedious and disagreeable reading,' was the comment he made.

after all it is much more singular for the rapidity with which the expression of these varying views chanced to follow one another than for the views expressed. The disparagement of great poetic work by writers, themselves of great poetic power, and likewise the extraordinary praise lavished by them upon very ordinary verse, are both significant facts which can hardly fail to arrest at times the attention of the student of literature. The history of letters, in truth, abounds in singular judgments which men of genius have passed upon the productions of other men of genius. It is often hard to tell which is the more remarkable — the mean opinion which these entertain of what the rest of the world has approved, or the admiration they have or profess to have for what the rest of the world refuses to regard with favor.

“Many will recall the lofty scorn which Matthew Arnold poured upon the men who for generations had admired and enjoyed Macaulay’s ‘Lays of Ancient Rome.’ He proclaimed that a man’s power to detect the ring of false metal in these pieces was a good measure of his fitness to give an opinion about poetical matters at all. The self-sufficiency of this utterance is as delicious as its positiveness. These ‘Lays’, it may be added, had been welcomed with such intense enthusiasm by Christopher North, the critical lawgiver of the generation of their appearance, that Macaulay felt himself constrained to make a personal acknowledgment of the cordiality of the greeting his work had met from the then all-powerful reviewer who had been one of his extreme political adversaries.”

Professor Lounsbury points out the fallibility of authors as critics: “The possession of creative power is indeed far from implying the possession of a corresponding degree of critical judgment. In literature all of us have our preferences and our aversions. Perhaps even more than their inferiors are men of genius susceptible to feelings of this nature and to the errors of judgment caused by them. The revelation of their likes and dislikes is in consequence apt to be more entertaining than edifying. . . .”

“For the truth is that in the case of works of the imagination the settled judgment of the great body of cultivated men is infinitely superior to the judgment of any one man, however eminent. Very wisely that body will not in the long run, nor ordinarily even in the short run, accept the decision of any self-constituted censor which runs counter to its own conclusions. A genuinely great production will in the end find its own public which in time will become the public; and that public will not be deterred from admiring it by the most bitter attacks of the ablest writers in the most influential periodicals. In his estimate of works involving special knowledge, the individual wisely defers to the authority of experts. In works of the imagination, however, every man of culture is in varying degrees an expert himself.”

To sum up: Book-reviewing is to be distinguished from literary criticism. The former is a branch of journalism; the latter a branch of literature. Book-reviewing suffers from haste in the work of the reviewer, lack of intelligence and from commercialism, — the control of the advertiser upon the literary department. Yet the commercialism is only one fault among many, and it is part of a great national evil. It must be borne in mind that criticising is judging, which does not mean blaming altogether. "The fine art of praising" is sometimes part of a critic's duty.

It is a mistake to assume that book-reviewing of to-day has degenerated from a noble past. The reviewing of former days was faulty and unsatisfactory, often absurdly savage in its attacks. This will be shown still further in a discussion of English reviews.

Book-reviews for a librarian's use must be prompt, they ought to be brief and clear; they should express an opinion. On imaginative literature they are most apt to be doubtful, and the librarian should be able to judge for herself.

§ 1

It is said that the first English review of a book in the modern sense was a tract, by John Dennis, on a fashionable epic of the moment, published in 1696. It is not necessary, however, for us to go back so far as that, and it is impossible in an hour's talk, to make an attempt to study English book-reviewing from its beginning. It is worth while to look back about a hundred years, and to consider what is undoubtedly the most famous period of book-reviewing in the English language. Not only do the famous book-reviewers, their writings and their victims, illustrate a number of points which are important to-day, but the men and the period are intensely interesting in themselves. The time is that of the opening years of the nineteenth century, when Europe was convulsed, exactly as it is now, in a terrible struggle to rid itself of an enemy of human liberty. We know to-day that the period is famous in English literature, and that, so far as creative work is concerned, there were giants in those days. The age of reason had passed, and the tide of romance was flowing. Scott was soon to start writing his novels; Coleridge, Wordsworth, Shelley, Byron, Keats, and Southey were publishing their poems.

§ 2

The Edinburgh Review, the first of the famous book-reviewing magazines, was founded in 1802.<sup>1</sup> From the beginning Francis Jeffrey was its editor. He held that post for twenty-seven years, and he continued to write for it for about forty-six years. He would be personally interesting if for no other reason, as the author of one of the most famous book-reviews ever printed, — that on Wordsworth's "The Excursion." He was a young Scotch advocate, educated at the Universities of Glasgow and Oxford, and practicing law in his native city of Edinburgh. He was invited to conduct the Review, and did so until 1829, when he was appointed Chief of the Faculty of Advocates and resigned his post to Macvey Napier. Jeffrey became Lord Advocate of Scotland in 1830; doubtless a very important post, but one chiefly interesting to readers of English novels because of Lord Advocate Grant and his fascinating daughter, who appear in the pages of "David Balfour." Later Jeffrey became a judge, as Lord Jeffrey, and sat upon the bench until his death in 1850. He was beyond compare the arch-critic of the old school, dictator of literature, who uttered his judgments with the authority of a Pope speaking ex cathedra. Physically he was a small man, but when he sat in the chair of the editor of the Edinburgh, he roared like all the bulls of Bashan. Thomas Carlyle speaks of him as delicate and attractive, a dainty little figure hardly five feet four inches in height.

In considering the fact that Jeffrey frequently treated authors very much as though they were guilty prisoners at the bar, and he the judge upon the bench, wearing the black cap and about to pronounce sentence of execution, it must not be thought that he was entirely a wielder of the club. It is true, that he believed one of his principal duties was, as Mr. Gosse says, to put an extinguisher on small men of letters. But his standards were those of the eighteenth century; he did not understand the nineteenth. Campbell was an eighteenth century poet, and so he praises Campbell. Byron, Keats, and Wordsworth were nineteenth century poets, and consequently fell under his displeasure. He did not understand the new spirit, and thought whatever was new was surely bad. He finds something to blame in Keats, but also something to praise. In a review of Keats's poems in 1820 he says that he has been exceedingly struck with the genius which they display and the spirit of poetry which breathes through all their "extravagance." Here, surely, is a case of criticism repeating itself. Do not the comments of Lord Jeffrey upon Keats sound very much like those of some staid book-reviewer to-day dealing with such rebels as Vachell Lindsay or the author of that extraordinary book, "The Spoon River Anthology"?

In Lord Jeffrey's career there is a case of a book-review leading to a duel, as in the century before, when precise mannered English gentlemen fought with rapiers over the correct scansion of a line of poetry. Jeffrey reviewed the poems of Thomas Moore, with the result that arrangements were made for a duel between the reviewer and the poet. The police, however, had orders to interrupt and there was no bloodshed.

The solemnity and finality of his sentence of literary death pronounced upon Wordsworth, can hardly be surpassed. Beginning with the famous sentence "This will never do," Lord Jeffrey seems to believe that he has retired the poet to obscurity forever. The "Lyrical Ballads," he says, wavered between "silliness and pathos," but "The Excursion" makes him perceive that "the case of Mr. Wordsworth. . . is now manifestly hopeless; and we give him up as altogether incurable." He had found in Wordsworth "occasional gleams of tenderness and beauty," but now he must consider him "finally lost to the good cause of poetry."

As we all know, Wordsworth frequently wrote things marked by bathos and absurdity, but if we consider the reputation accorded to his work as a whole, it is only necessary to read Jeffrey's review (in the Edinburgh, November, 1814), to recognize truth in the saying that "the whole history of criticism has been a triumph of authors over critics."

Lord Brougham was an associate of Jeffrey in the foundation of the Edinburgh Review, and is said to have written eighty articles for the first twenty numbers of it. In later years, Walter Savage Landor spoke of the better spirit which then prevailed in the Edinburgh from the generosity and genius of Macaulay. "But," says Landor, "in the days when Brougham and his 'confederates' were writers in it, more falsehood and more malignity marked its pages than in any other journal in the language." Brougham (or possibly Jeffrey) was the author of the review of Byron's "Hours of Idleness."

Byron published it in 1807. It was praised in the Critical Review, of September, 1807, and abused in the first number of the Satirist. In January, 1808, the famous criticism came out in the Edinburgh Review. It has been said of the review that its want of critical acumen is less obvious than the needless cruelty of the wound inflicted upon a boy's harmless vanity. Byron was deeply hurt. He had already under way a satirical poem, which he now carefully polished. "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," appeared in the middle of the following March and at once made a hit.

§ 3

This is the way he countered upon the Edinburgh critics:

A man must serve his time to every trade
 Save censure — critics all are ready made.
 Take hackneyed jokes from Miller, got by rote,
 With just enough of learning to misquote;
 A mind well skilled to find or forge a fault;
 A turn for punning, call it Attic salt;
 To Jeffrey go, be silent and discreet,
 His pay is just ten sterling pounds per sheet:
 Fear not to lie, 't will seem a sharper hit;
 Shrink not from blasphemy, 't will pass for wit;
 Care not for feeling — pass your proper jest,
 And stand a critic, hated yet caressed.

And shall we own such judgment? no — as soon
 Seek roses in December — ice in June;
 Hope constancy in wind, or corn in chaff;
 Believe a woman or an epitaph,
 Or any other thing that's false, before
 You trust in critics, who themselves are sore;
 Or yield one single thought to be misled
 By Jeffrey's heart, or Lambe's Boeotian head.

To these young tyrants, by themselves misplaced,
 Combined usurpers on the throne of taste;
 To these, when authors bend in humble awe,
 And hail their voice as truth, their word as law —
 While these are censors, 't would be sin to spare;
 While such are critics, why should I forbear?
 But yet, so near all modern worthies run,
 'Tis doubtful whom to seek, or whom to shun;
 Nor know we when to spare, or where to strike,
 Our bards and censors are so much alike.

Then should you ask me, why I venture o'er
 The path which Pope and Gifford trod before;
 If not yet sickened, you can still proceed:

Go on; my rhyme will tell you as you read.
 "But hold!" exclaims a friend, — "here's some neglect:
 This — that — and t'other line seem incorrect."
 What then? the self-same blunder Pope has got,
 And careless Dryden — "Ay, but Pye has not": —
 Indeed! — 'tis granted, faith! — but what care I?
 Better to err with Pope, than shine with Pye.

Another founder of the Edinburgh, and one of its reviewers was Sydney Smith, the only one of the trio, apparently, who was really witty. He poked fun at Miss Hannah More in very much the same way that a light and amusing writer of to-day, say, Mr. E. S. Martin of Life, might enjoy jesting about some serious reformer, such as Dr. Anna Shaw.

§ 4

The second of the famous reviews was the Quarterly, founded in 1809, with William Gifford as its editor. Gifford, it is said, undoubtedly established the reputation of this magazine for scurrility. He was known as the man who did the "butchering business" in political journalism. His bludgeon was far heavier than Jeffrey's. Hazlitt declared that Gifford believed that modern literature should wear the fetters of classical antiquity; that truth is to be weighed in the scales of opinion and prejudice; that power is equivalent to right; that genius is dependent on rules; that taste and refinement of language consist in word-catching. Gifford's review of Keats's "Endymion," called forth Byron's famous apostrophe to:

John Keats, who was killed off by one critique
 Just as he really promised something great,
 If not intelligible, without Greek
 Contrived to talk about the gods of late
 Much as they might have been supposed to speak.
 Poor fellow! his was an untoward fate;
 'Tis strange the mind, that very fiery particle,
 Should let itself be snuff'd out by one article.

The attacks on Keats appeared both in Blackwood's Magazine and the Quarterly Review. The Blackwood article was Number 4 of the series bearing the signature "Z" on "The Cockney School of Poetry." The previous articles of the same series had been a series of preposterous insults directed against Leigh Hunt. Mr. Sidney Colvin thinks it is not quite certain who wrote them, but that there is every reason to believe that they were the work of John Wilson, suggested and perhaps revised by the publisher, William Blackwood. The Edinburgh critics attacked Hunt's opinions, his weaknesses as a writer, and proceeded to gross accusations of vice and infamy. The articles on Hunt included several allusions to "Johnny Keats," representing him as a puling satellite of Hunt. The attack was merely a tirade of the sort which one associates with backwoods journalism of half a century ago.

It begins with the words: "Our hatred and contempt of Leigh Hunt," and proceeds to accuse him of "low-born insolence," a "leprous crust of self-conceit," and "loathsome vulgarity." This is the man who is remembered to-day very largely for his innocent rhyme: "Jenny Kissed Me," and for "Abou Ben Adhem"! But Blackwood's speaks of Hunt's "polluted muse." "We were the first," writes the reviewer, "to brand with a burning iron the false face of this kept-mistress of a demoralizing incendiary. We tore off her gaudy veil and transparent drapery, and exhibited the painted cheeks and writhing limbs of the prostitute."

It seems difficult to believe that Lockhart, son-in-law of Sir Walter Scott and the author of the biography of Scott, could have written the attack on Keats, — the fourth of the series. Mr. Sidney Colvin, however, thinks that it was all but absolutely proved that Lockhart was really the author of it. Then followed the articles in The Quarterly Review, on Keats's "Endymion," probably written by Gifford, the editor. The review, it has been said, is quite in Gifford's manner, — that of a man insensible to the higher charm of poetry, incapable of judging it except by mechanical rule and precedent, and careless of the pain he gives. Considering the perfect modesty and good judgment with which Keats had in his preface pointed out the weakness of his own work, both attacks are inexcusable.

"Endymion," says the critic, is "calm, settled, imperturbable, drivelling idiocy." (It will be well to remember that the next time you hear vigorous denunciation of a contemporaneous book.) The review ends with the famous cruel reference to Keats — who is called a "starving apothecary," — "so back to the shop, Mr. John, back to plasters, pills, and ointment boxes, &c."

The poet's friends arose in his defense, and there was a warfare of articles, ending, so far as two of the writers were concerned, in some bloodshed. John Scott, the editor of the London Magazine, was shortly afterwards killed in a duel by a friend of Lockhart. The duel arose from these very quarrels about the Blackwood articles. Keats took the attacks upon himself very calmly, although there is little doubt that he was for a while immensely discouraged by them. He said that he would write no more poetry, but try to serve the world in some other way. Afterwards he recovered his poise, and fortunately for English literature, continued to write. Many of his friends, however, fully believed that his early death was caused more or less directly by these savage onslaughts. Byron's jingle is well known:

Who killed John Keats?
 "I," said The Quarterly,
 So savage and Tartarly,
 "I killed John Keats."

Considering the nature of the disease from which Keats suffered, it is not at all improbable that these criticisms may have indirectly hastened his death. He spoke about the subject with noble simplicity:

"I cannot but feel indebted to those gentlemen who have taken my part. As for the rest, I begin to get a little acquainted with my own strength and weakness. Praise or blame has but a momentary effect on the man whose love of beauty in the abstract makes him a severe critic on his own works. My own domestic criticism has given me pain without comparison beyond what Blackwood or the Quarterly could possibly inflict: and also when I feel I am right, no external praise can give me such a glow as my own solitary re-perception and ratification of what is fine."

And again: "There have been two letters in my defence in the Chronicle, and one in the Examiner, copied from the Exeter paper, and written by Reynolds. I don't know who wrote those in the Chronicle. This is a mere matter of the moment: I think I shall be among the English Poets after my death. Even as a matter of present interest, the attempt to crush me in the Quarterly, has only brought me more into notice, and it is a common expression among bookmen, 'I wonder the Quarterly should cut its own throat.'"

Another critic who wrote for the Quarterly, was John Wilson Croker, who is immortal for one remark which Macaulay made about him: "I hate him," said Macaulay, "worse than cold boiled veal." After all, and in spite of the animosity, rancor, and venom which characterized a good deal of the criticism and counter-criticism of literary men in those days, it must be admitted that some of them had a power of expression which added salt to life. Doubtless we could name public men of to-day who hate one another worse than cold boiled veal, but few of them would have such vigorous thought and power of expression.

Sir Walter Scott was also a critic on the Quarterly Review. Scott's critical writings usually contain something generous about every writer they have occasion to mention. His fine and intelligent praise of Jane Austen is well remembered. He showed therein that he appreciated the qualities in her work which was absent in his own.

§ 5

The third of the great reviewing magazines, and the last one of this group which we can consider, was Blackwood's Magazine, founded in 1817. This has already been mentioned, in connection with the assaults upon Keats. With Blackwood's is associated the name of John Wilson, as literary editor, from 1817 to 1852. His pen-name was Christopher North. Wilson was an athlete as well as a man of letters, and there are fine stories of his spending the night in drinking and singing songs with his friends, and starting out at daybreak to run from London to Cambridge. Charles Dickens declared that he was a patron of cock-fighting, wrestling, pugilistic contests, boat-racing and horse-racing. "He was fond of all stimulating things," said Carlyle, "from tragic poetry to whiskey-punch." Tennyson replied to one of Christopher North's criticisms in the verse:

You did late review my lays,
 Crusty Christopher;
 You did mingle blame and praise
 Rusty Christopher.
 When I learnt from whence it came,
 I forgave you all the blame
 Musty Christopher
 I could not forgive the praise
 Fusty Christopher!

§ 6

I have not dwelt upon this side of the famous reviews in order to make out that they were altogether bad and untrustworthy. Their violent attempts to crush writers, whom they often entirely misunderstood or were incapable of appreciating, were, however, the things for which they are most famous. It is useful for us to know about their violence and their blunders, lest we pay too much heed to the reviewers to-day. Nearly all of these old reviews are alive to-day, — old-fashioned in appearance, bulky, and solemn, but a good deal sweetened in temper. They are usually behind the times, and proud of it; but they are solid and dignified. Certainly not up-to-date, from the point of view of the cheaper magazines, they are, nevertheless, well edited and authoritative. The few books which they criticise, and the long time they take in doing it, make them of only very occasional use to librarians seeking book-reviews.

§ 7

Now, we come to the weekly reviews, of a later generation.

The Saturday Review was founded in 1855. It is not primarily a literary review, but is of a general nature, devoted especially to politics, literature, science and art. It is conservative, not to say high Tory, in its politics, and has always breathed the spirit of the old universities, the established church, the conservative party, and classical scholarship. A short story, published about twenty years ago, contains a few sentences descriptive of the Saturday Review, and of the mental attitude of many of its readers. One Englishman met another sitting on a park bench somewhere in Italy. One of them pulled a copy of the Saturday out of his pocket and began to read it, remarking that it was the Bible of the Englishman when travelling. The other said, "Yes, Shakespeare we have to share with the Americans; but, damn it, the Saturday Review is all our own!"

You can hardly get the spirit of the vanished England of a generation ago better than by turning to a volume anywhere in the 1870's or 80's. It never approved of the United States of America; and anything, whether a book, a man, or a custom, which hailed from this country was in its eyes presumably wrong. So far as one can discover, the reason for this attitude was that we have a republican form of government from which, in the view of your fine, old, crusted Tory, no good thing can come. This attitude toward America was maintained in the Saturday Review until recent years, and was still apparent as late as the outbreak of the Spanish War, in 1898. The Review freely predicted disaster for us if we should attempt to try conclusions with Spain, but had its predictions falsified by the outcome of the Battle of Santiago. Inasmuch as the Tory spirit is quick to acclaim success, the Saturday Review had to admit that the victory of the American fleet was complete, and the action of our sailors toward their defeated enemies beyond criticism. The editor seemed to stutter as he uttered his praise, and it was with obvious relief that he turned, in the next paragraph, to condemn the bad conduct of the French mariners on the sinking liner, "La Bourgoigne," for France had been a hereditary enemy as well as this country. It is looking back into English history to remember these old enmities and animosities. Things are changed to-day!

The Saturday Review kept up the tradition of a severe, not to say savage, critical journal. It denounced Thackeray for his lectures on "The Four Georges," and made violent onslaughts upon Dickens. In the number for January 3, 1857, it contained an article on Dickens as a politician, in which it objected to the novelist's attacks upon the abuses of his day almost exactly as some journals now denounce the novelists who refuse to flatter the powers that be in politics and religion. "Who," asks the Saturday Review, "takes Mr. Dickens seriously? Is it not as foolish to estimate his melodramatic and sentimental stock in trade gravely as it would be to undertake a refutation of the jests of the clown in a Christmas pantomime?" It solemnly protests against Dickens's legitimate satirization of the Court of Chancery in "Bleak House," and objects to the picture of a government office as represented by the Circumlocution Office in "Little Dorrit." It made that final and crushing charge against Dickens, that he only wanted to sell his books. The Saturday admitted, in the manner of its kind, that no doubt there are great abuses in the country, and much that wants reform in Parliament and in the law. And then it went on, exactly as its prototypes do to-day, and will do so long as the world lasts, to object to the manner of the criticism and to imply that nobody has any right to criticise except the persons criticised. Consequently, it would follow that there should never be any criticism of anything! In a final delightful paragraph it declares that Dickens is utterly destitute of any kind of solid requirements, absolutely ignorant of law and politics; does not know his own meaning; does not see the consequences of his own teaching; and is unable to play any part in any movement more significant than that of the fly, and generally a gad-fly, on the wheel. Again, speaking of "Bleak House" and "Little Dorrit," the Saturday Review remarked that they were both "paltry, dry bundles of nonsense."

As a result of its attacks on various writers, including, by the way, Longfellow, Froude, Lytton, and the Kingsleys, Charles and Henry, it became variously called "The Saturday Snarl," "The Saturday Scorpion," "The Saturday Slasher," "The Saturday Butcher," and "The Saturday Reviler." In spite of its frequent savagery, it has maintained a high level of scholarship; while fear of its attacks upon faulty English and slipshod writing have probably had a good effect. On the other hand, Mr. James Grant, the writer of a severe criticism of the Saturday Review, declared sarcastically that its abuse was desirable, for that the very fact that it praised an author was presumptive proof that he was a man of inferior merit.

§ 8

The Athenaeum, another weekly,<sup>1</sup> was founded in 1828 by James Silk Buckingham, who aimed, he said, to make it "like the Athenaeum of antiquity, a resort of the most distinguished philosophers, historians, orators, and poets of the day." The Athenaeum, unlike the Saturday Review, is first and foremost a book-review periodical; its sub-title is "Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music, and the Drama." It has never been famous for severe attacks upon writers, and when it celebrated its seventieth birthday in 1898, declared with apparent truthfulness that it had from the first opposed such criticism as that which the Edinburgh Review had employed against Wordsworth, Shelley, and Keats. Writers like Charles Lamb, Walter Savage Landor, Thomas Hood, Thomas Carlyle, Leigh Hunt, Hazlitt, and Mrs. Browning, have been numbered among its contributors.

The War, which is blamed for so many things — from the rise in price of Russian caviare (from the Mississippi) to the increased cost of paper and printing materials — is probably responsible for the change to monthly form of The Athenaeum. Such a change instantly deprives it of some part of its value to librarians, — the timeliness of its reviews. Before the change I should have been inclined to recommend it as perhaps the best English book-reviewing periodical for the small library which can only subscribe to one. Many librarians might think it still the best for such a library, and they may be right. For The Athenaeum has begun to cater to librarians even more than does The Dial in this country. Working in harmony with the Library Association, it publishes each month an annotated list of new books, arranged by the Decimal Classification, with the best books for libraries marked by a star. The last is done by a "Committee of Specialists" from the Library Association. In other words, this part of the periodical looks like the A. L. A. Book List. It is a straightforward adoption of certain American library methods, and The Athenaeum has been frank in its admiration of many of these methods. We should, I suppose, be complimented. It is probably old fogyism which makes me believe I like The Athenaeum better as it was.

Do not think, however, that its value has been decreased by this work by and for librarians. On the contrary, it is only the lessened frequency of issue which, generally speaking, could be lamented. Its reviewing work is of a high average, and it is, so far as I know, never bitter nor violent in spirit. Its typography and appearance are pleasing.

In a small library, the librarian may have to prefer one of the periodicals of a general nature, and so may choose The Spectator, with its traditionally sympathetic attitude toward America, or The Nation (London). Both of these weeklies treat book-reviewing seriously; in both, the reviews are usually good, sometimes excellent. Whether an American librarian should select a periodical because it is friendly in its tone toward this country is a question. With our easy-going characteristics, euphemistically called "optimism," a steady course of praise is not necessarily suggested.

A number of new reviews, rather too many to discuss separately, have come into existence, as some of the older ones (like The Academy) have passed out. These devote varying amounts of space to book-reviews. They are chiefly useful for their championship of "new" and radical ideas, — about verse forms, about freedom in speech, or rather in writing, on "sex" subjects, and about politics and religion. They are useful because of their championship of what is supposed to be new, and they are also to be distrusted for the same reason. In reading them it is often apparent that their liberalism is but toryism in another guise, — "What I like is good, and what you like is bad." Their narrow-mindedness is sometimes as remarkable as their tolerance, and their originality frequently consists in taking an ancient maxim and tipping it upside down. Twenty-five years ago the paradoxes of Oscar Wilde were a new note in English letters; to-day they are old-fashioned. It does not take courage now to defend vers libres among educated people, nor to speak a good word for the "free" novel. It is conventional to do so. The brave man, the really "advanced" thinker would be the one who would come boldly to the defence of the despised "Mid-Victorian" period in art and letters.

THE GYPSIES OF MONASTIR<sup>1</sup>

BY REV. LEWIS BOND

---

EDITED FROM MANUSCRIPTS IN THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

---

THE two letters printed here were addressed to the late Albert Thomas Sinclair by the Rev. Lewis Bond, American missionary at Monastir. The originals are now with the Sinclair mss. in The New York Public Library, and are printed here exactly as written by Mr. Bond. The two lists of words which accompanied the letters have been united into one and arranged in alphabetic order. No key to the pronunciation is given by Mr. Bond, but presumably the letters have their normal English sounds. From the allusion to the name Rome in the second letter it would appear that at least one other letter is lacking.

December 7th, 1899

There are many Gypsies of good standing in this region who live in permanent dwellings. Some are workers in iron, and many are porters and common labourers. The head of the fountain-makers and repairers in this city is a Gypsy. He is a member of our Protestant church. These citizen Gypsies do not speak the Gypsy language. Here they speak Turkish or Bulgarian. In Resen, fifteen miles from here, they speak Albanian. In religion they appear to be about equally divided between Mohammedans and Christians. The wandering Gypsies are largely horse-traders, iron-workers on a small scale, and beggars. The old women tell fortunes. In both classes music is prominent. Young women, gaudily dressed, accompanied by an old woman, go about singing and dancing at private residences. The people are usually well built and walk erect with an elastic step. As to language, I give you a few words in use here.

The Gypsies are supposed by people here to have come originally from Egypt, and they are called Gupty (g hard and u = you). The Turkish government writes them down in passports, etc., as Copts. Another quite common name, but more commonly used in Bulgaria and eastern Macedonia and Thrace is Tzigany. The Gypsies rather prefer this name. The citizen Gypsies do not like either name, hoping to outlive the memory of their peculiar blood.

October 8th, 1901

I enclose a few Gypsy words and phrases as per your request. I got them from two Gypsies — an old man and a boy of seventeen years. I find that the Gypsies are not over ready to be interviewed and so I gave a small coin to set the tongue loose. These two live in a strictly Gypsy village a mile from this city. The forty families in this village are all orthodox. The tent encampment of which I send a photograph is made up of Mohammedan Gypsies who live in the city in winter.

In my previous letter I meant Rome to be pronounced Rōm. My opinion is that this Rom is the same as Room, which is the word always used by the Turks for a Christian subject. The Turks call Greece, Room, and in making out a travelling teskere for any Christian he is entered as a Room, i. e., as a Greek orthodox. Even Protestants are thus entered.

The common opinion here is that Gypsy is equivalent to Egyptian. No one here seems to have heard of "Little Egypt."

Machka is the word for "cat" used by the Servians, Macedonian Bulgarians, and Albanians. The Bulgarians in the principality use another word, kotka. I am not acquainted with vila. But if, as you suggest, it may be pila, I can see that perhaps in calling a cat the Servians use pila, pila, simply as a pet term. The Bulgars say pila, pila, in addressing pets of all kinds, it being equivalent to "dear little bird." The Turks use "my lamb" in the same way.

As to Tsigani no one can speak authoritatively it would seem. The term is not used in this region. But I heard no other name when I resided in Thrace, a score of years ago. I then supposed the word referred to the musical habits of the race — their instruments keeping up a continued tsiga, tsiga, tsiga, in which they found unceasing delight. Many of the best violinists in Rumania are Gypsies — some of them famous.

There are many families of Gypsy origin living in this city who are so refined as to be ashamed of their origin, and to-day they cannot speak the Gypsy language at all. This is the case with our Gypsy colporteur. Also the water-works superintendent. But everybody can see that they are of undoubted Gypsy stock. There is no difference as to origin between the settled and wandering Gypsies.

The Protestant Gypsy superintendent of water-works is employed on a salary by the city government to inspect and keep in repair several lines of fountain-pipes and all the street drains of the city. He is very much respected by the authorities because of his efficiency and honesty. Many Gypsies are living in comfort and a few are quite well off. The horse-dealers are perhaps the most wealthy. Blacksmithing is the favourite trade, and in this the women often work with their husbands. The making of sieves — of skin and wood — appears to be monopolized by the Gypsies.

I see no reason for supposing that the Turkish Gypsies were originally of two or more kinds. The Gypsy of these parts does not wander any great distance.

The Gypsy is found here and there in Albania, but not in large numbers. The Albanians call them Evgit (sing.), Evgittés (pl.), Egypt? The Albanian Gypsy works harder and begs less than the Macedonian Gypsy.

Bulgarian merchants who have much to do with the Gypsy get the Gypsy numbers easily. The Gypsy has his own numerals from one to five and then the Greek does service largely.

Since writing the above I have questioned one of the boarders in our girls' school about vila, vïla. She is from Old Servia, which is now a part of Turkey. Her statement is that vila is used in calling ducks, and pila in calling poultry. The cat is máchka, whether big or little, and the Servians, like the Bulgarians, call them with matsě, matsě.

You refer to the reported dissolute habits of the settled Gypsies. It is true that there are loose characters among them, but it is my opinion that they are more chaste than the Slavic races. The wandering Gypsies are said to be exceedingly correct.

I have failed to secure photographs of the wandering Gypsies. A photographer promised to get me some pictures, but hasn't kept his promise. I bargained with a Gypsy from the near village to bring me two of his children this week for me to photograph, but he hasn't come. I enclose an attempt I made on a group at the tent village, but for some unexplained reason it turned out queer. It was with great difficulty that I got them to stand, in fact I had to bribe them with money. Yesterday the Austrian Consul called on me and he told me that these same Gypsies utterly refused to allow him to take their photographs. But I want to make another attempt either on them or on the Christian Gypsy village. These villagers were living in tents exclusively a very few years ago, when the government allowed them to build themselves huts.

SHERMAN GENEALOGIES

THE LIBRARY has received as a gift from the widow of the late Professor Frank Dempster Sherman, of Columbia University, his large collection of genealogical records pertaining to the Sherman family. Professor Sherman, who for many years held the chair of Graphics in Columbia University, was well known as a poet, and had devoted much time to the collection of Sherman genealogical records. The results of his researches he preserved in ten beautifully hand-printed loose-leaf books, relating to the various branches of Shermans in the United States.

There are five books of "The Ancestors and Descendants of Philip Shearman, the First Secretary and Recorder of Rhode Island," from whom, among other prominent persons, are descended Maj. Gen. Thomas West Sherman and Hon. James Schoolcraft Sherman, Vice President of the United States. In the volume on the "Descendants of Capt. John Sherman of Watertown, Mass.," are the families of Maj. Gen. Sidney Sherman, Judge Roger Minot Sherman and Hon. Roger Sherman, signer of the Declaration of Independence, from whom are descended, Hon. Roger Sherman Baldwin and Hon. Simeon Eben Baldwin, Governors of Connecticut, Hon. William Maxwell Evarts, Hon. George Frisbie Hoar, U. S. Senators, and others. The book on "Hon. Samuel Sherman of Stratford, Conn., and his descendants," has such names as Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman, Secretary of State John Sherman, and Judge Daniel Sherman of Woodbury, Conn. Another book contains, "The Descendants of William Sherman 'the Pilgrim' of Marshfield, Mass.," and also "The Descendants of William Sherman, 'Cordwainer,' of Dartmouth, Mass." Ten generations of "The Descendants of Rev. John Sherman of Watertown, Mass.," are recorded in another book.

In addition the collection includes two volumes on "Extracts of Sherman Wills," and "Military Services of Shermans in the War of the American Revolution and War of 1812." There are also several privately printed books and pamphlets treating of the history of the family.

The appreciation in which Professor Sherman's scholarly labors were held by those who were most familiar with them is shown in a letter by Thomas T. Sherman, Esq., who wrote thus: "The tireless energy, patience and perseverance with which his skillful and exhaustive researches in this field have been conducted for many years, coupled with his great accuracy, have resulted in the compilation by him of comprehensive and complete genealogies of reliability and inestimable value."

NEWS OF THE MONTH

GIFTS

DURING the month of October the Library received as gifts a total of 3,752 volumes, 5,311 pamphlets, 87 maps, and 17 prints. The following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of these gifts: From Mr. F. ## RECENT BOOKS OF INTEREST ADDED TO THE LIBRARY

INDUSTRIES AND INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Agg, Tansy Radford. The construction of roads and pavements. New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. vii, 432 p., 1 diagr. illus. 8°. VDG

"This new highway book brings with it the atmosphere of the typical middle western state college or university. The outstanding characteristic is an endeavor to present information in a way that makes it of practical benefit to people who are actually doing things. The author states that the book is primarily intended as a text in a college course on roads and pavements. It will be found valuable by highway engineers, both as a book of reference and as a handbook, as it contains numerous tables and diagrams. It is largely a compilation, the sources of information being current periodical literature and other treatises on highway construction, but in the main the material has been well selected. Especially valuable are the examples of good practice following the discussions on the various types of roadways. They present in brief form the specifications actually in use in localities that have secured satisfactory results with the types in question... There is a real need for this up-to-the-minute book on highway construction."—Canadian engineer, Sept. 28, 1916.

Also reviewed in Good roads, Oct. 7, 1916; in Engineering record, Sept. 30, 1916.

Bacon, Raymond Foss, and W. A. HAMOR. The American petroleum industry... New York: McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., 1916. 2 v. illus. 8°. VHY

These two sizable volumes by the director and the assistant director of the Mellon Institute of the University of Pittsburgh, with special chapters by other experts, offer an important addition to the literature of the subject. Volume 1 follows somewhat the beaten track of geochemistry, geology, distribution, properties, history, and production. Volume 2 brings together from many sources and with convenient arrangement the present state of the refining art and certainly supplies a long felt want both to the expert and to the technology librarian. There is also a chapter on hygienic considerations, a complete glossary of bitumenology, and a wealth of footnote references.

Reviewed in Canadian engineer, Oct. 1, 1916; in Oil, paint and drug reporter, Sept. 18, 1916.

Baldt, Laura Irene. Clothing for women, selection, design, construction; a practical manual for school and home. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. [1916.] xiv p., 1 l., 3-454 p., 8 pl. illus. 8°. (Lippincott's home manuals.) VSM

This unusually attractive, practical, and complete guide by a teacher in the Department of Textiles and Clothing, School of Practical Arts, Teachers College, Columbia University, should find a wide use. The reader is told how to plan and purchase a wardrobe and something about the distinguishing characteristics of fabrics. Part 2 has to do with clothing design, pattern making, use of patterns, and color—the latter section having been made particularly attractive through the use of colored plates. Part 3 deals very thoroughly with the practical making of clothing and the final chapter has some pertinent suggestions to teachers. There are 269 excellent illustrations.

"Textile study affords abundant opportunity to inculcate principles which will tend toward wiser expenditure of incomes, while in the appeal to artistic sense and feeling, lies the teacher's strongest asset in bringing her pupils to conform to rational modes of clothing their bodies. By well-directed study of color, line form and texture, she may lead them to avoid some of the evils of the modes of her day, whether it be lack of simplicity in the decoration of under- or outer-garments, extremes in width or length of skirts, sheerness of attire, pinched-in waists, high-heeled shoes, or what not."—p. 426.

Cavanagh, George A. Model aeroplanes and their motors; a practical book for beginners. Drawings by Harry G. Schultz... With an introduction by Henry Woodhouse... New York: Moffat, Yard & Co., 1916. 6 p.l., 132 p., 16 pl. diagsr. 12°. VDY

Author states that the Wright Brothers' interest in flying was aroused by a toy helicopter and that many men who as boys competed for prizes are now contributing their share to the development of the art of aeronautics. Mr. Cavanagh, model editor of the Aerial age, has written this little book, with working drawings, telling how the models are made, with directions for installing gasoline, steam, and compressed air motors. There is a list of world's records, as well as a glossary of aeronautical terms.

Edwards, Charles Alfred. The physico-chemical properties of steel. London: C. Griffin & Co., Ltd., 1916. x, 229 p., 3 pl., 1 diagr. illus. 8°. VIR

"The object of the present book is to give a comprehensive account of the chemical and structural constitution of steels; to describe the internal changes that occur when steels are heated and cooled under varying conditions and to indicate the effects of those changes upon the properties of the materials. Considerable attention has been given to the thermal and structural transformations of the iron-carbon system, because they are fundamental elements of all steels. This has been treated in the manner which is now being generally adopted for metallic alloys—namely, from the point of view of the equilibrium diagram—and the subject is developed upon this foundation. An effort has been made to gather all the important facts dealing with the metallography of steel and present them in a condensed form."—From the preface.

"It need hardly be said that anything which comes from the pen of Professor Edwards is likely to be authoritative in statement, and in the present work he has very ably gathered together a large number of facts dealing with the subject matter of the volume." [It] will be found most useful to the layman."—From a review in the Iron and coal trades review, July 21, 1916.

Also reviewed in Mining and scientific press, Sept. 23, 1916, and in Mechanical engineer, June 30, 1916.

Hoar, Allen. The submarine torpedo boat; its characteristics and modern development. New York: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1916. xv, 211 p., 3 diagsr. illus. 8°. VXV

For the general reader, also for the technical man or naval engineer who has not specialized in the subject. Traces the development of the submarine, and tells in as simple language as possible about the various requirements of design and of power plant. There are also conclusions drawn as to future development, a consideration of defence against submarine attack, and of tactical evolutions, as well as brief descriptions of tender and salvage ships, torpedoes, and submarine mines. In addition to the many interesting half-tone illustrations there are several large size plates showing plans and sections.

Millar, Andrew. Wheat and its products; a brief account of the principal cereal: where it is grown, and the modern method of producing wheaten flour. London: Sir I. Pitman & Sons, Ltd. 1916. x, 134 p., 1 map, 1 plan, 1 pl. illus. 12°. (Pitman's common commodities of commerce.) VPM

Although this little book is intended for "all classes of readers" and aims to tell in a simple way about the distribution of wheat, its analysis, handling, and "the various processes through which it passes before pure flour is ready for the use of the housewife or baker," the author states that the text is technically correct, so that it should be of value to millers and others connected with the breadstuffs industry.

Neubecker, William. Practical sheet metal duct construction. New York: Sheet Metal Pub. Co., 1916. 194 p. 8°. VDD

A practical book of instructions published originally in Sheet metal. Author states that this is the first attempt to cover the particular subject of ducts for heating and ventilating systems. Describes shop equipment, materials, and the various operations. Has chapters on the construction of air filters, castings, dampers, and the calculation of pipe and duct areas. Chapter seven describes and illustrates the various types of ventilators. Provided with more than 200 illustrations.

Sargeant, E. W. Centrifugal pumps and suction dredgers... London: C. Griffin & Co., Ltd., 1916. viii, 188 p., 16 diags. illus. 8°. VDM

Practical and devoid of higher mathematics this book aims to keep in view the various limiting factors of a commercial nature. Principles of design are explained in a simple manner and there are instructions for pattern-making, moulding, machining, and testing. A chapter is devoted to each of the special types, as for irrigation and drainage, sewage, wreck salvaging, docks, fire apparatus, while four chapters describe the applications to dredging. The many excellent illustrations include 14 folded plates.

"Its numerous examples from actual working, and the problems to which the author addresses himself, are precisely those which the draughtsman or user will oftenest meet with in the ordinary course of things, and on which therefore the book will prove most useful. The aspect of difficulties depends a great deal on the point of view, and the student when he leaves the college for the workshop or the field finds that text-books often leave him short of the information he most sorely needs, and it is in this respect that the book will probably be most valued. The author writes with the familiarity that comes of a long practical experience of his subject and an absence of the higher mathematics that shows how little of it is needed in the bulk of the problems the working engineer is daily called upon to solve."—Mechanical engineer, July 7, 1916.

Also reviewed in Mechanical world, Sept. 29, 1916.

Sothern, J. W. M. The marine steam turbine; a practical description of the Parsons and Curtis marine steam turbines as presently constructed, fitted, and run... London: Crosby Lockwood and Son, 1916. xxiv, 561 p. illus. 8°. VXHG

Previous to 1906 writers on the steam turbine treated their subject almost entirely from the standpoints of hydraulics and thermodynamics. The original edition of Mr. Sothern's work was the first treatise of note to present "accurate details of many of the essential parts of marine steam turbines, together with notes on the behavior of these prime movers based upon actual experience at sea." The chief additions noted in this, the 4th edition, relate to impulse turbines and geared-down turbines, and to a simple discussion of entropy. Very completely illustrated.

"Many of the new illustrations are devoted to reproductions of the working drawings of turbines of different types. Of these a large proportion have been reproduced (by consent) from our columns. In addition to these the diagrammatic general arrangements, which show clearly the situation and object of the various parts, are certain to be found particularly useful. Students often find that the elaboration of detail, necessary in an actual working drawing, makes it difficult for the tyro to see readily the nature and function of many of the component parts."—Engineering, July 28, 1916.

Also reviewed in Power, Sept. 12, 1916; in Machinery, Aug., 1916; in Shipbuilding and Shipping record, March 16, 1916; in Mechanical world, April 7, 1916.

ECONOMICS, SOCIOLOGY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

Bogart, Ernest L., and C. M. THOMPSON. Readings in the economic history of the United States. New York: Longmans, Green and Co., 1916. xxvii, 862 p. 8°. TAH

"The need of providing large college classes with collateral reading in a course on the economic history of the United States has led to the preparation of this book. Its purpose has therefore been primarily to provide a sufficient body of material to supplement the more systematic text-book and lectures. This material has, with only one or two exceptions, been drawn from contemporary sources; in the later periods, with the growing wealth of such material, official documents have been largely used. But in every period these documents have been supplemented by the more human and the more illuminating comments of travellers, observers, and others who were entitled to speak authoritatively...

"Agriculture, manufactures, tariff, commerce, transportation, money and banking, labor, and the movement of the population have, each in turn, been given due emphasis in the panoramic picture here unfolded. As among the different periods it is believed that a balance has been maintained that will commend itself to teachers of American history. To the period from 1600 to 1808 about one fourth of the book is devoted; one half to that from 1808 to 1860; and the remaining fourth to the period since the Civil war."—Preface.

Filsinger, Ernst B. Exporting to Latin America; a handbook for merchants, manufacturers and exporters. With a foreword by Dr. Leo S. Rowe... New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1916. xiv p., 1 l., 565 (1) p. tables. 8°. TLB

"This volume is written from the business man's standpoint and everything that smacked of the purely academic has been avoided, in order that the book may be thoroughly practical. It should prove of particular value to commercial travellers, students of export problems, government officials, officers of export associations and many other groups interested in export trade besides merchants and manufacturers.

"In the appendix are included lists of books useful in the study of Latin American trade from the general and technical standpoints. The lists of technical dictionaries, aids to correspondence, grammars, readers, etc., should be of interest to the student of Spanish and Portuguese. Statistics and other data have been presented in the most succinct and logical fashion to aid the business man in studying Latin American trade possibilities."

The book contains information on every step in the process of exporting, giving detailed directions as to packing, invoices, customs regulations, banking facilities, cable rates, money, weights, measures, consulates, etc.

WOOD-ENGRAVING TO-DAY<sup>1</sup>

BY FRANK WEITENKAMPF

THE art of engraving on wood, as it was practiced in Europe and subsequently in this country, has held its own for five centuries. Not with uniform success. There were even times (in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries) when its low vitality made it appear moribund. From the beginning, it has been more or less an art for the people. The early block-books and type-printed books were illustrated with woodcuts, while separately issued cuts further served as a factor in civilization, bringing humanity from mediaevalism into our modern world. And from then on, to recent times, illustrated books in various fields of learning, as well as school books and work in belles lettres, were for the greater part decorated with wood-engravings.

When, with Thomas Bewick, near the end of the eighteenth century, there came a complete change in method, a period ensued which in its reproductions of paintings and other works of art finally culminated in the so-called "new school" in the United States. No greater contrast could be imagined than the woodcuts of the time of Dürer, cut with a knife on a plank (that is, with the grain), in exact facsimile of the original drawing in line, and these modern American engravings, engraved with the graver across the grain of the wood, with a devotion to tone that lost sight of the line per se.

In the old woodcuts the engraver treated the block as a white surface on which form and shadow were to be indicated in lines cut in relief, to be inked, and to print black. In the modern wood-engraving, the block is dealt with as a black surface (if an untouched block were inked it would print a solid black), into which lines are to be cut which, being incised (not in relief) and not catching the ink, will appear white in the print. Obviously, the proper number of white lines will reduce the solid black to the shade of gray desired.

With the advent of the photomechanical processes, wood-engraving appeared to pass. Very few of our American artists remained to carry on

VENICE, ALDUS MANUTIUS, 1499

Cut in facsimile of a line drawing, on wood, along the grain, the lines being thrown into relief, in order to hold ink for printing, by cutting away the surface of the block around them.

BY THOMAS BEWICK

Engraved with a graver (burin) on wood, across the grain. This is largely "white line" work, the lines being incised so as to appear white, while the portions of the surface of the block left untouched hold the ink and print black.

the traditions of the art in reproduction: Henry Wolf (recently deceased), Timothy Cole, and W. G. Watt. But, without going further into the question of the cause of the decay of wood-engraving, it may be noted that, true to its former record, the art has not died, and it is not apt to do so. It is practiced to-day, less as a reproductive art, more as a means of direct expression for the artist. That implies, of course, that the artist himself engraves on the block (just as he etches on the copper plate or draws on the lithographic stone), without the intervention of an engraver between him and his public. The result is what has been called "painter-engraving," in which the artist is represented by his own lines, and which is thus an "autographic art." It was inevitable that this should lead away from the method of the reproductive engraver who rendered the tones of a painting or wash-drawing by covering his block with fine work to produce tones. Economy of means, summariness of impression are now sought after, rather than detailed completeness of effect.

In Europe the use of the wood-block by artists, though not as widespread — I had almost said common — as the use of copper and etching-needle, is noteworthy. In France we encounter the magisterial vigor and swing of Lepère, the cleverly placed blacks of Vallotton, the work of Henri Rivière and Paul Colin. Lucien Pissarro and E. Verpilleux are more or less identified with England, where William Strang, Sleigh, Ricketts, Gordon Craig, Sturge Moore and Nicholson express themselves with a temperament national, yet widely varied in its individual notes. In Germany and Austria, Emil Orlik, Walter Klemm, Laage, Karl Moll, Fanto, and numerous others are proving that the possibilities of vigorous simplicity offered by the block have perhaps a special appeal to the Teutonic mind. A considerable proportion of this work is printed in color, printed in flat tints as are the Japanese prints, but in most cases showing no other strong Japanese influence.

ORIGINAL WOODCUT BY F. VALLOTTON

In our own land, the earliest “painter-engravings” came from the very men who had helped to create that “golden age” of reproductive engraving in America. Kingsley, Closson, Wolf, Bernström, French, engraved their own conceptions on wood, — with the completeness of effect called for by the works in tone which they usually translated. But a small number of younger artists took up engraving on wood in a spirit that induced simplicity in rendition of form, with either a recurrence to the straight line-facsimile work of old (say, by George W. Plank), perhaps even with a certain archaism (as in the work of Allen Lewis), or an indication of tone by means of flat tints. The last may be in color, as in some of the work of Rudolph Ruzicka, who uses light tints, or Ethel Mars, or Bertha Lum, or in the “Ipswich Prints” of Arthur W. Dow, whose application of the Japanese method "to Western expression and use" won enthusiastic praise from the late E. F. Fenollosa. More Japanese in feeling are the colored woodcuts of B. J. Olssen-Nordfeldt, and yet more so those of Miss Helen Hyde. Howard McCormick engraved a few blocks with a rugged insistence on pictorial completeness, using the graver with noteworthy freedom of touch. W. F. Hopson, Lewis, Hugh M. Eaton, and Plank, have utilized the medium in the production of book-plates, while James Britton in three or four posters showed what could be done with the tools of the old-time poster-carver. Recent exhibitions have disclosed other devotees — not all yet "arrived" nor all entirely balanced — of the wood-block, and of its near relative, the linoleum-print.

In the best work produced here we find two important elements: seriousness of purpose and an evident understanding of the medium, of its possibilities and its limits. This matter of saying your say within the proper limits, with the proper restraint ("freedom within the law," Miss Rittenhouse puts it, with regard to poetry), cannot be insisted on too often. It implies a basic law in all art.

Finally, it is not without significance that some of these American artists have had opportunity, — Ruzicka in his series of engravings of "New York,"

ST. PETER'S

“FOUNTAINS are among the most successful monuments of the late Renaissance,” and those which stand on either side of the great Square of St. Peter’s show that Symonds’s statement should be enlarged so as to include the century which followed that period. Mr. John Evelyn, the accomplished English traveller of the seventeenth century, saw the fountain of Paul V soon after its completion and describes it in his diary as the “goodliest I ever saw.” Since his day the twin fountains both of Trafalgar Square and of the Place de la Concorde have been erected, but Evelyn could still give the superlative praise to the great Roman model. Although the two fountains in the Square of St. Peter’s with "prose impressions of the City" by Walter Prichard Eaton, published by the Grolier Club, and Lewis in "Journeys to Bagdad," by Charles S. Brooks, — to emphasize again the direct harmony existing between illustrations in line and the printed text. Wood-engraving, since it is, like type-cutting, a relief-process, offers a peculiarly effective proof of this fundamental factor in book making. We see this in the books produced in the late fifteenth century in Germany, and during that brilliant period of book-illustration in Italy as that land was passing from the fifteenth century into the next. Men such as William Morris in England, Joseph Sattler in Germany, Bruce Rogers and T. M. Cleland in the United States, have in our own times clearly brought before us the necessity of considering the relation of the parts of a book to each other, leading to unity in the design of the volume. The importance of this is not too generally appreciated to-day, but wood-engraving has played its part in helping toward its realization.

NEWS OF THE MONTH

GIFTS

DURING the month of November the Library received as gifts a total of 1,944 volumes, 4,172 pamphlets, 118 prints, and 100 maps. The following may be mentioned as among the more important and interesting of these gifts: From the British Museum the Library received the "Catalogue of Cuneiform tablets in the Kouyunjik collection of the British Museum; supplement by L. W. King, M.A.," London, 1914; the "Catalogue of Arabic books in the British Museum, by A. G. Ellis, M.A.," vol. 1, London, 1894; and the "Catalogue of books printed in the XVth century now in the British Museum, Part 4, Italy, Subiaco and Rome," London, 1916. From Mr. Frank A. Munsey of New York came 417 bound volumes of New York newspapers, including the "New York Press" from 1896 to 1916, and volumes of "The Sun," and the "Tribune"; from Mr. Edward C. Moore, jr., 61 bound volumes of "The London Graphic," the "Illustrated London News," and "Harper's Weekly"; from Mr. Allen B. Forbes of New York, a miscellaneous collection of 296 volumes and 30 pamphlets, including a file of "The Economist and Statist"; from Mr. Edwin P. Kilroe of New York, a set of campaign literature used by the principal parties in the 1916 Presidential campaign; and from Mrs. Eliot Norton of New York, a miscellaneous collection of 28 volumes, 234 pamphlets, and 104 circulars.

Gifts of prints were received from the following: From the Century Company came 6 wood-engravings by Timothy Cole; from Mr. Bolton Brown of New York, 2 of his lithographs; from Mr. G. F. C. Smillie of Washington, D. C., 36 steel engravings and 1 photograph; and from Mr. George H. Sullivan of New York, an engraving by B. Thibaut, "St. Ignatius." Gifts of music were received from J. Fischer & Bro., New York, and Mr. Ross Jungnickel of New York (7 compositions arranged for orchestra by Mr. Jungnickel).

ADDITIONS AND USE OF THE LIBRARY IN NOVEMBER, 1916

DURING the month of November, 1916, there were received at the Library 27,817 volumes and 4,973 pamphlets. (These figures include the additions to both Reference and Circulation Departments.) The total number of readers recorded in the Central Building was 75,452. They consulted 208,779 volumes. Visitors to the Building numbered 253,373.

III

§ 1

The course of book-reviewing in the United States does not offer the striking incidents nor coherent history which may be found in Great Britain. The latter years of the eighteenth century saw the rise in America, of a number of magazines, miscellanies, and "repositories," many of which lived for only a few years. Some of them expired after the publication of one or two numbers. Their names are almost universally forgotten, and are known only to the investigator of the dry beginnings of our periodical literature.<sup>1</sup> With the nineteenth century came the North American Review, which celebrated its centennial in 1915. The North American was conceived as a scholarly review, in the manner of the famous quarterlies in England and Scotland. It did not, as a matter of fact, become a monthly until many years had passed. Its editors were able and erudite men, and the list includes the names of Lowell and of Charles Eliot Norton. From the first, it attracted many of the best writers in this country. The centennial numbers reprinted contributions from its pages in the past, by writers like Edward Everett, Jared Sparks, the dignified scholar who succeeded in editing nearly all the humanity out of George Washington, John Adams and Longfellow. Other contributors were Bryant, Ticknor, Daniel Webster, and George Bancroft. What is true of the English and Scotch reviews is in part true of the North American. In its early days, the book-reviewing section was of importance, owing to the fact that the disproportion between the number of books reviewed and the number published was not so great as to-day. In a current number of the North American, out of about a hundred and sixty pages, fourteen are devoted to book-reviews. The North American has never pretended to pay any attention to light literature, and has purposely confined its reviews to what it considers more serious and important books. It has moved with the age: it no longer publishes book-reviews of twenty or thirty pages in length. Fourteen pages of reviews in the current number to which I referred, include notices of six books, and these are not works published six months or a year or two ago, but are what may be called, with reasonable accuracy, recent. So far as they go, then, the book-reviews in the North American are well worth while, but it would be folly to say that any librarian would subscribe to it primarily for them.

Another of America's excellent magazines is, of course, the Atlantic Monthly, younger by some decades than the North American Review, but even more distinguished in its career. Its editors include James Russell Lowell, William Dean Howells, and Thomas Bailey Aldrich; and the list of its contributors reads like a biographical dictionary of American literature. The Atlantic has had its lean years. One of its editors is said to have remarked that his predecessor had outdone Moses, for while Moses made the Red Sea dry, this editor had succeeded in making the Atlantic dry. Even less than the North American, is the Atlantic Monthly concerned to-day with book-reviewing. It is one of those periodicals quoted in the Book Review Digest, but on looking over the last four or five numbers I saw only one article devoted to book-reviews. This gave the writer's views on twenty-nine novels of the preceding year. It was a pleasant article, but rather an essay on the fiction of the year, to keep the general reader posted, than a series of reviews useful to a librarian. By the time it appeared most librarians had looked over these novels and formed an opinion for themselves, or adopted one from some other reviewing publication, and the books had either been rejected for purchase, or else had been in circulation for a number of months, and were already showing signs of wear.

§ 3

The first weekly periodical of its kind to be published in this country and to continue without break to the present day, is The Nation, founded in 1865, in New York. The first editor of The Nation, who left his personality stamped upon it, was the late Edwin L. Godkin, a journalist of Irish birth and education. He had high motives, strong opinions, great ability, both as a writer and editor, and a peculiar power of sarcastic utterance. Mr. Godkin had been a war correspondent and what he had seen of the horrors of war made him become a lifelong advocate of international peace. He, and others, bequeathed this advocacy to The Nation, as well as the militant attitude toward political corruption, and sympathy with the independent spirit in politics.

James Bryce, comparing The Nation with English reviews, wrote: "The Nation resembled the Spectator in devoting its opening pages to comments on current events, and also in the definiteness of its political programme, while it recalled the Saturday Review in the pungency of its tone as well as in the excellence of its literary criticism. It was, however, no mere imitation, either of those journals or of any other, but a new creation which brought new elements into the American press.”<sup>1</sup>

Since 1881, The Nation has been owned by the Evening Post of New York. Much, but by no means all of its contents, appears first in that journal. The Post (and The Nation) set high their standards of political conduct and literary merit. Some of their critics thought that they set them impossibly high, and that what their editors termed idealism, was instead a supercilious and contemptuous attitude toward human weakness and human failings.

From the start, The Nation appealed to an educated audience. Its earliest friends and contributors were connected with the colleges and universities; its readers to-day are, in great number, members of the faculties of these institutions. As a result, it has often applied to it the term “high-brow,” — a phrase somewhat impaired in usefulness by its frequent application to any journal which prefers genuine news to petty gossip, a well-written book to a “best-seller,” and grammatical to slipshod English.

The Nation has kept up its tradition, not only as a foe to war, but as a consistent advocate of the rights of the so-called inferior races, especially the American negroes. The latter advocacy would be a natural inheritance from its first literary editor, Wendell Phillips Garrison, as well as from abolitionists among its founders. Its high literary standards came, in great part, from Mr. Garrison. It has opposed a protective tariff, urged and supported reforms of the civil service, and decried inter-collegiate athletics, or what it deemed an over-development of them. Its views on sociological and fiscal questions are what are termed “sound” by some, and conservative by others. One has, in considering book-reviews, to remember the principles and the prejudices of the magazine in which they appear. Reviewers know, or soon learn, the traditions of a publication, and even their minor paragraphs are affected thereby.

Writers are inclined to think of The Nation as the Sir Hubert Stanley of American book-reviewing publications, — its approbation is praise indeed. Some writers — and not those alone who have been slated in its pages — regard it with dislike. You will remember the punishment reserved for the priggish tutor in Mr. Owen Wister’s “Philosophy 4”: he is left “writing book-reviews for the ‘New York Evening Post.’”

<sup>1</sup> Quoted in “Fifty Years of American Idealism; The New York Nation, 1865–1915,” by Gustav Pollak, — a volume whose title illustrates the warmth of the affection bestowed upon The Nation by its contributors and admirers, as well as the reason why many Americans have accused it of self-conscious rectitude.

Among librarians there is a respect for The Nation which sometimes borders upon reverence. We can afford to smile at this attitude, but any weekly periodical, of high standards, discussing as The Nation does, politics, science, music and finance, as well as books, old and new, is almost indispensable for the library. It devotes a large amount of space to current reviews. A recent number, which I pick up at random, considers twenty-one books; and many weeks the number would be much larger than that. Its longer reviews on special subjects, such as books about the fine arts, scientific books, works about military and naval science (for this pacific periodical contains many contributions from learned officers of the army and navy), and about government and sociology, are worthy of respect. Its shorter reviews, especially those of current fiction, are, as is almost invariably the case with any publication, its weakest feature. A review of a current novel is frequently nothing more than the expression of personal like or dislike, and when a reviewer sits down to write for The Nation his opinion upon a new novel, he is inclined to err upon the side of fault-finding, as in another periodical he might be too flattering.<sup>1</sup>

§ 4

“The Literary History of America,” by Professor Barrett Wendell, refers to The Dial, in Chicago, as a paper which seems at present the “most unbiassed, good humored, and sensible organ of American criticism.” We have no weekly devoted solely to book-reviewing. We have no monthly devoted entirely to it, as the greater part of The Bookman is devoted to general literary articles, and to paragraphs about authors. The Dial, which appears fortnightly, is, I think, the only publication of the kind in the United States; and it has been pursuing its pleasant and dignified career for about thirty-six years, most of the time under the editorship of the late Francis F. Browne. It appears to be conducted on the theory that a paper may avoid being fussy or pedantic and still not be deficient in scholarship, and that it may discriminate between good and bad literary work without any note of hostility or ill humor. To be sure, one sometimes misses in it the amusing and brilliant flashes of malice which enliven other periodicals, and although it never sinks below a certain level, it seldom rises far above it. The Dial has a respectably high average which it strikes year in and year out. This is true at any rate for the last decade, which is about as far back as my personal experience of it goes.

<sup>1</sup> An interesting article — not a review — about a famous book, appeared in The Nation for February 23, 1905. It is called “The Winner in the Chariot Race,” and it is typical of the kind of literary article which is exquisitely pleasing to some readers, but sure to give pain to others.

A recent number contains two reviews of a page or more in length, three longer articles which review in groups a number of books, — works on government, biography, and the more important novels. Eleven other new books are treated more briefly, but probably adequately, in about half a page apiece. This number opened with two general articles on literary subjects, and four pages of comment upon books and reading, and upon libraries and librarians. (For this literary magazine gave especial recognition to librarians before The Athenaeum did so.) It closes with brief notes and news, and a long list of the titles of recent books. This was a smaller number of The Dial, not one of the special issues which appear in the height of the publishing seasons.

§ 5

It is hardly necessary to speak at length of The Bookman (New York), an illustrated monthly magazine "of literature and life." It is now in its forty-fourth volume, and like all magazines has varied in quality. A custom which it followed for a number of years was to group some of the novels of the month in one article and review them under such a heading as "The Personal Equation, and Twelve Novels of the Month," or "The Note of Pessimism, and the Novels of the Month." This style of book-reviewing seems always to appeal to reviewers who take themselves rather seriously, as it gives a touch of scientific literary criticism to their work. It often helps to make an agreeable article for the general reader, but it is apt to be confusing to librarians who wish specific comment upon a certain book. If in one or two of the novels there is really nothing to which the phrase "the personal equation" especially applies, the reviewer must needs distort that novel or color his review of it in such a way as to make it seem to apply. The Bookman has enlisted the services of many competent reviewers; as a whole it is always readable, and it possesses a sense of humor.

§ 6

The publications which we are considering now are so familiar to American librarians that it is unnecessary, if not impertinent, to dwell long upon them. The reputation for kindness in the reviews published in the New York Times Book Review is well established among librarians. The excellence of many of its longer, signed reviews is also a point to be remembered.

There are probably a hundred newspapers in the United States which pay more or less attention to books, and a few of them include surprisingly good reviews. Some of these papers can command the services of intelligent book-reviewers. An author is always pleased when a review indicates that its writer has read the book, and read it intelligently. To read the book which one is about to review is not always the custom. Yet when it is followed, the result is not only gratifying to the author, but valuable to us all. In the rush and hurry of the offices of a newspaper, a great many books do not get read at all. Either, as Mr. Bliss Perry pointed out, the reviewer clips the publisher's notice, or he takes a few sentences from the preface, or he glances casually into the book and jumps to a hasty conclusion. The frequency with which the publisher's notice (that paragraph of puffing usually printed on the jacket of a book and known as the "blurb"), the frequency with which this is repeated in newspaper book-reviewing is almost incredible. I know an author who subscribed to a press-clipping bureau and read the hundred or more notices which were sent to him about his new book. Nearly twelve months later, a relative of this author wrote to him that she had heard of a complimentary notice which had appeared about his book and about him as a writer, in some paper in Texas. The kind relative went on to say that she had not yet seen the notice, but had only heard about it in a letter from a friend in the city where it was first printed. The friend had lent it to another friend, and in course of time it was to be sent to the relative who promised to forward it to the tremulous and expectant author. After more or less correspondence the author at last received the clipping, which was nearly worn out, it had passed through so many hands. It was, indeed, flattering in its nature, and indicated a belief that the reputation of such writers as Thackeray, Dickens, and Howells were wavering in the balance on account of the rise of this new and extraordinarily gifted novelist. The author did his best to thank his friendly correspondent, and he refrained from saying that the delightful nature of this compliment was somewhat impaired for him by the fact that he had already read the same praise, uttered verbatim et literatim, by about thirty-five different newspapers from Portland, Maine, to Santa Barbara, California, and that, moreover, the whole thing originated in the puff, by means of which the publishers of the book were doing their best to increase its sale.

In spite of this sort of thing, there is occasionally a newspaper, sometimes of the most unexpected sort, which happens to have upon its staff a man or a woman who is writing honest, intelligent and witty book-reviews. An author who had seen many reviews, uniformly favorable, of his books, told me that a little twenty-line notice in a rather obscure Yorkshire newspaper, not only pleased him most, but seemed to show more intelligent appreciation of what he was trying to say, than all the others. Sometimes these reviewers are doing their work without any pay except the practice which it gives them, the pleasure of seeing their writing in print, and the opportunity to gain the editor's notice, and so merit, in the future, payment in money. Such writers of reviews are frequently not hurried; they may spend a week in reading a single book and in writing a review of it, and the work is often correspondingly careful. (An experienced hand, of course, might do far better in a few hours. The plodding nature of much of our own work as librarians may make us exalt the plodder, and forget that brilliant work is frequently done at high speed.) Sometimes there are professional men or women who enjoy dabbling in literary work in their odd moments, and so write reviews. Certain papers and periodicals devoted to special interests, such as, for instance, those published by religious sects, often contain excellent book-reviews. All of these are interesting and valuable to the librarian, if they appear in time. Unfortunately, they seldom do that.

In discussing newspapers, it should be said that the three quoted in the Book Review Digest, are the New York Times, the Springfield Republican, and the Boston Evening Transcript.

§ 7

It is hardly necessary to speak to librarians about the handy little publication to which the American Library Association chooses to give the cryptic and unattractive name of A. L. A. Booklist. It is, of course, aimed especially at the small libraries which can afford to wait until the Booklist appears. It is undoubtedly cautious and conservative in its recommendations, keeping in mind not the educated person of mature mind and catholic taste, but rather the provincial type of library patron who is easily shocked.<sup>1</sup> If any of us ever write a book, we may feel fairly certain that out of a feeling of fellowship for us as librarians the A. L. A. Booklist will duly recommend it, showing that however stern and uncompromising they would have the professional literary critic, when it comes down to their own case librarians prefer the milk of human kindness to the corrosive acid of outspoken criticism.

Judging from the current number (January, 1917), the phraseology of the annotations in the Booklist is open to improvement. One does not demand graceful writing in these notes, but such awkwardness of expression as to leave the meaning in doubt certainly impeaches the value of the criticisms.

§ 8

There are innumerable periodicals of a general nature, which contain book-reviews. However useful they may prove, from time to time, a discussion of them is superfluous now. No library subscribes to the Outlook, the Independent, nor the Literary Digest, primarily for the sake of its book-reviews. The reviews in The New Republic are especially worth attention because in it we have not only an ably edited paper, but one with different opinions, different sympathies, from those of the other weeklies. On a question of sociology, of economics, or of politics, The New Republic would usually represent the opposite opinion from The Nation, for instance. These different opinions are reflected in the reviews, — hence the value of both periodicals to the librarian. The reviews in The New Republic frequently have a studied sophistication which makes it rather a task to consult them.

§ 9

It is impossible for the small library to subscribe to all the literary reviews. It is often impossible for the librarian to read all to which there is access. Hence the convenience of some sort of review in tabloid form.

The Book Review Digest supplies this compressed form of book-review in a practical fashion. It suffers from one of the faults of the reviews themselves, in that its notices often appear too late to be of the greatest service to the librarian. Indeed, as this publication has to wait until the reviews are published before it can go to press, it is naturally still later than the reviews. Its system of indicating the favorable or unfavorable nature of a review by a plus or minus sign is not invariably satisfactory, as I have known an ironical review to be misunderstood by the person who made the digest of it, and marked with a plus sign, when the reviewer meant something quite different. It is not always possible to get the meaning of a review, which may be eleven or twelve hundred words in length, into a summary of eight or ten lines, any more than it is possible to have a genuine knowledge of a book merely by reading a review of it. The Book Review Digest reflects, of course, and in some respects accentuates the faults of the book-reviews. Like the reviews it is a good thing for a librarian to call upon for help, but a bad one upon which to rely absolutely. It would be safe, I think, to name The Book Review Digest as one of the four or five most desirable publications to help in the selection of books. But that would be bad advice unless coupled with a warning not to depend too much upon digests, excerpts, extracts, and machinery, thereby neglecting the few opportunities a librarian has of reading books, and forming opinions about them.

§ 1

In the last of these talks it may be useful to consider the various kinds of book-reviews, and try to discover which of these we are most likely to need in our work. We talk glibly, says Mr. Bliss Perry, in our academic classrooms about various types of literary criticism: "the judicial, the interpretative, the appreciative, the impressionistic, and so on. It is evident that these types or species of book-reviews exist and co-exist, and that they are found not merely in the periodical literature of our own country but in all civilized countries, and that the processes indicated by the words 'judicial,' 'interpretative,' 'impressionistic' may be traced not only in the work of any one critic but even in successive pages of the same critical essay."

Another classification of book-reviews, one suggested to me by Miss Mary W. Plummer, is: the informational review, the non-committal, the perfunctory, and the critical. The perfunctory book-review is one I have already mentioned in connection with much of the book-reviewing done in newspapers. The person entrusted with the work of reviewing books is apparently the office boy, who, equipped with a pair of scissors and a jar of paste, clips out the publisher's notice of the book, perhaps taking it from the little printed advertising leaflet which accompanies the copy sent for review, and sends it, just as it stands, to the composing room.

And thus it often happens that when a novel is published, fifty or a hundred newspapers scattered across the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, solemnly record that Mr. or Mrs. Blank's novel is a heart-gripping work, a book filled from cover to cover with human interest, pulsating with good red blood, strong, virile, compelling, and convincing. (That word "convincing" is their pet and their darling.) Its hero, Roderick Livingstone, is a fine type of clean-limbed young American manhood, while the heroine, the delightful Betty Fairfax, is a most charming and winsome specimen of the American girl in full flower of her charm. Those who have read Mr. or Mrs. Blank's novel feel that a new star has risen on the literary horizon, and that by this work Mr. or Mrs. Blank takes his or her rightful place with the imperishable masters of English fiction. The new book combines the dramatic power of Dumas, the humor of Dickens, the keen insight of Balzac, and the wit and irony of Thackeray. The charming illustrations are by ———; $1.25 at all bookstores.

The non-committal type of book-review may be written by someone who has not really read the book. Sometimes, however, it is a part of a set policy of the publication to play safe and offend no one. Each new book is, therefore, credited with a notice, which, although really written in the office from which it emanates, is so neutral in tone that it might apply equally well to the "Decameron" or to "Rollo at Play." Except for the fact that the non-committal book-review will as a rule tell you whether the book is one of history; biography, or whatever, it is almost wholly useless.

§ 3

The informational type of book-review gives its reader a fair idea about the contents of the book without going far into real criticism. Often this is a useful type. The review may consist chiefly of quotations from the book, and in some classes of literature there can be nothing better than that. A review of a volume of poems, for instance, which does not quote as extensively as space allows, has certainly failed to do its duty. There are other kinds of books from which quotations, if well chosen, will tell the reader of the review more than any amount of criticism, no matter how clever the criticism. Mr. Frank B. Sanborn, who has for many years written literary and other letters to the Springfield Republican has said that copious quotations from a book give it the best kind of review.

In the genuine critical book-review the art of reviewing reaches its highest level. The reviewer who is well enough informed to appraise a book fairly, to point out with justice its strong and its weak sides, to assign with some degree of accuracy its real importance, and to do all this in clear terms and briefly, produces the kind of review for which the librarian, at any rate, is seeking. To do this, the reviewer must possess that amount of knowledge of general literature which gives him a sense of proportion. The writer of some of Baedeker's guidebooks declares that a man must know something of the whole world to write a good guidebook of any one country. It will not do, he says, for the writer to become over-awed about the low range of sand hills which form the highest points of land in Holland, so long as the Alps and the Rocky Mountains are in existence. In the same way the book-reviewer must curb his enthusiasm for the latest volume of plays until he considers them against the background of the great dramatists of the English stage. This does not mean, however, — and it is important for the reviewer of books to remember that it does not mean — that all current books should be contrasted with the monuments of literature, and condemned because they do not reach an equal height. If librarians should reject every novel that comes along until they find one as good as “The Tale of Two Cities,” they would not only go without buying any new fiction for a great many years, but they would also miss an amount of good work.

The author’s profession is peculiar; he is one of the few people who suffer from the competition — literally the competition, commercial and otherwise — of the dead. There can always be found persons who like to shake their heads and exclaim mournfully, “The days of the great novelists or poets are past. We shall have no more Scotts, Dickenses, nor Thackerays; no more Byrons, Wordsworths, nor Tennysons.” This may be true, but it is also true that in the days of those great novelists, the critics and other despondent persons<sup>1</sup> would shake their heads and say, “Do not talk to me about Scott, Thackeray, and this Charles Dickens, — the days of the great novelists are past. Where is there to-day anyone to compare with Richardson, Fielding and Smollett?” And in the days of Richardson, Fielding, and Smollett, I do not know to whom the melancholy critics harked back, but I am sure that they spoke regretfully of some writers of past glory, whose equals would never be seen again.

In the essay, already quoted, on “Literary Criticism and Book Reviewing,” Mr. Brander Matthews writes: “The aristocrats of culture put their trust in academic standards, as becomes the custodians of tradition. They look to the past only; they rarely understand the present; they are prone to distrust the future. They did not perceive the scope of ‘Don Quixote,’ of ‘Hamlet,’ of the ‘Cid,’ and of the ‘Femmes Savantes.’ They were outraged by Hugo’s ‘Hernani’ as they were disgusted with Ibsen’s ‘Ghosts.’ They are rarely open-minded enough to disentangle what is praiseworthy out of the powerful works which revolt them — Zola’s, for example, and Whitman’s. But it is only fair to suggest that they are swift to belaud delicate art and technical skill. They found it easy to appreciate Virgil and Racine, Gray and Longfellow, and in general any other poet who has felt himself to be the heir of the ages and who has walked reverently in the footprints of his predecessors. They are, therefore, more likely to be right in their opinions on authors of the second rank than in their judgments upon original geniuses. In this latter task their very education seems often to be a disadvantage, sophisticating their perceptions and leaving them less ready to understand the elemental and the universal than the plain people are. It may even lead them to distrust a writer of primitive force, chiefly because the plain people like him.

“The book-reviewers are wise in rejecting the advice of the strenuous writers quoted early in this paper and in not being tempted to take themselves too seriously. It is enough to give them pause to recall the fate of more than one of their predecessors and to remember that when a book-reviewer decides that it is his duty to scourge the incompetent and to drive out the false pretenders, he may be clever enough to select Robert Montgomery as his victim, or he may be unlucky enough to happen upon Byron or Keats or Wordsworth.”

§ 5

In speaking of the critical book-review, we must recognize the different standards of criticism for different classes of books. In mathematics, and in many of the more or less exact sciences, accuracy is, of course, the first requisite. The book cannot adequately be reviewed except by a specialist in that branch of learning. In the same way, while a person of good general information may review a book on, let us say, Greek sculpture or Italian opera, and produce a fair book-review which describes the scope of the work, of course only an expert is prepared to give anything like a definite judgment upon it. That is why I have spoken so much about longer reviews and preferably the signed reviews in such publications as The Nation and The Dial. The editor of the book-reviewing publication does not turn over important books to the people who write the brief notes and paragraphs. The men or women who are qualified to review a book on government, or the fine arts, or philosophy, are usually able to command a fee for doing the work. They expect a certain amount of space, and they are accustomed to sign their names to the review.

Even then, while the librarian may accept these judgments as the best at that time, and buy the book on the recommendation, it must be remembered that the greatest experts often go sadly astray, or are themselves condemned and ridiculed by the experts of the next decade or generation. Even in the field of science, that domain of “exact” knowledge, the discoverers and pioneers are often hooted down by the orthodox critics of their day.

The ideal writer of a book-review is a person who combines knowledge of his subject, with sympathy, tolerance, and humanity. He sees mistakes and errors, if they exist, but he does not allow them to blind him to positive merits. Certain experts, sometimes employed to review books, think that the art of criticism consists in tracking down minute, unimportant blunders. They run over the pages, hunting for some trifling inaccuracy or typographical mistake, and are triumphant when they find one. It is well for the author's sake, as well as for that of the reader, that errors should be detected and, if possible, corrected in a future edition. It is certainly desirable that any important errors, tending to misinform the reader of the book, should be noted in a review of it. It may be well to chronicle even small mistakes. But it is a question, if the critic's motive is purely altruistic and he is merely animated by a passion for accuracy, whether he should not bring about his laudable purpose by a brief letter to the publisher or author, who will be duly grateful. The reader of a book-review has seldom time to learn, nor does he care to learn, that there is a trifling mistake, say, in the pagination of the index, or that the middle initial of some obscure and unimportant person — to whom the only reference in the whole volume is made in a footnote — is given as "E" when it should be "A". Yet there are people who seem to think that in recording such things they are displaying their scholarship, when as a matter of fact, they are merely advertising their lack of it. I have heard learned men chanting, in a kind of barbaric glee, the fact that they had discovered in some colleague's book an error in a date, and one doubtful statement.

It is unwise to be too fond of exposing the minor inaccuracies of other folk. The chances are many that just as, with a triumphant chuckle, we indulge ourselves in the pastime, we may fall into some blunder as bad as the one about which we are complaining. In a brief review, which I once read, the reviewer recorded two or three small errors he had found. One of his discoveries was that the author had spoken of the right-hand page of a book as having an even number, when, really, that page in book-making is always given an odd number. As the book under discussion was wholly imaginary, the error might have seemed rather small to record, — especially, as only a few lines above, this meticulous reviewer had mis-spelled the name of the author whose carelessness he was reproving!

The reviewer, then, has a right to demand absolute accuracy in scientific works, knowledge of the subject in all books, and a readable quality in every book, except a reference book. I am not sure that even that should be excepted. Books are made to be read, even though some people dislike to admit it! The precise scholar is apt to look with distrust upon any book which is easy to read. I heard a conversation not long ago between a historical scholar and another man, in which the historian was inclined to laugh at the writings of Francis Parkman because they are readable and because they attempt to convey something of the romance which surrounded the early exploration of North America. He seemed to have in mind some special passage in which Parkman spoke of travellers near the St. Lawrence River, passing through woods by moonlight. Inasmuch as moonlight is more or less inseparably connected with romance, it annoyed him to have anything said about it at all; and he seemed to believe that Parkman should have suppressed all mention of the moon, or, if he felt bound to bring it in, should have procured an almanac, to "find out moonshine," and should have limited his description to a statistical table, giving the hours of the moon's rising and setting during this expedition. The other man agreed that it would be wrong for the historian to represent the moon as shining on any specific night, unless he had documentary evidence; but inasmuch as this expedition lasted for several months, he went on to say, it seemed reasonable to suppose that some time during those months the moon was really visible; and as it was known that the travellers did march by night, a reference to the theory of probabilities might seem to bear out, almost mathematically, Parkman's statement that on one night, at any rate, they marched by moonlight through the woods. Moreover, he maintained, it was not only justifiable but thoroughly commendable to try to fix in the minds of readers the events of those days, by describing the long line of French explorers, headed by their Indian scouts, proceeding through the forest by moonlight. By such a method he attained a degree of historical truth far above any astronomical hair-splittings.

But, no; it would not satisfy the historian. There were no living witnesses of that moonlight; there was not even a sworn affidavit about it; and so, while he was not quite ready to cast Parkman out from the accepted band of historians, he felt that he was still more or less an object of suspicion. Thus does scientific criticism make itself ridiculous when it ventures out of the fields in which exact knowledge is possible.

§ 7

In all books, the critic has the right to demand good English; clear English at any rate, grammatical English in all books, and choice English in works which pretend to belong to the belles lettres. Here again, it is possible to be fussy and pedantic; for over-exacting schoolmasters and grammarians can search the works of the best writers and come away with a fine crop of blunders of every kind. I suppose that the split infinitive has been the mistake most widely discussed by those who put an undue amount of trust in books of rules, and by those who think that culture may be acquired by obeying certain prohibitions. Certainly many persons and many writers of book-reviews take great joy in discovering split infinitives, just as our teachers at school used to search them out in our themes and compositions. It is wrong to split an infinitive — besides, as someone said, being cruel to the infinitive — but it is foolish to set up that, or any other mistake, as the touchstone of good usage. Not only does the split infinitive occur over and over again in the writings of lesser authors, but it may be found in the works of such masters of style and expert literary craftsmen as Matthew Arnold, Walter Pater, and Robert Louis Stevenson. This is only one example of the sort of error upon which the hypocritical book-reviewer may waste his time.

In an article on "Book Reviewing" <sup>1</sup> Mr. Robert Lynd has said: "Those to whom popular books are anathema have a temperament which will always find it difficult to fall in with the limitations of the work of a general reviewer. The curious thing is that this intolerance of easy writing is most generally found among those who are most opposed to intolerance in the sphere of morals. It is as though they had escaped from one sort of Puritanism into another. Personally, I do not see why, if we should be tolerant of the breach of a moral commandment, we should not be equally tolerant of the breach of a literary commandment. We should gently scan not only our brother man but our brother author. The ultra-artistic person of to-day, however, will look kindly on adultery, but show all the harshness of a Pilgrim Father in his condemnation of a split infinitive. I cannot see the logic of this. If irregular and commonplace people have the right to exist, surely irregular and commonplace books have a right to exist by their side."

§ 8

It is scarcely worth while to spend time in reading the book-review which is written not so much for the purpose of informing its reader as to give its writer the opportunity to cultivate an involved and tortuous style. Such reviews are not infrequent; they are the products of a sophomoric period of development continued in maturer years. One of the recent editors of the Atlantic Monthly said that the chief difficulty with manuscripts submitted by young writers — especially those at the college age — was not simplicity, but the lack of it, — the belief that wandering in obscure mazes of thought, and expressing oneself in cryptic phrases meant profundity. Thus the German commentators upon Shakespeare read into the text metaphysical subtleties never dreamed of by the dramatist; and in like manner the Browning Society made new difficulties with their poet's works, until Browning himself, when asked to explain a line, used to laugh, and say "I'm sure I don't know; ask the Browning Society." The peculiar style of Henry James was a genuine reflection of his mind; his imitators merely achieve his obscurity without the delicate power of analysis which lay behind it. A small mind may for a time look great by getting itself into a fog, but the illusion does not last.

§ 9

Writers of reviews sometimes blame a book for not possessing qualities which it never was intended to possess. They form an idea of the purpose which the author ought to have had, or of the manner in which the book should have been written. It does not occur to them to ask whether the author's purpose and manner may not be as good as their own. Because he did not think with them, they condemn him and his book.

Persistently to find defects does not indicate intellectual distinction. To be the one dissenting voice in a chorus of praise assures attention, and the temptation to attract such attention is, to a few persons, irresistible. From a recent review, on Ian Hay's (Captain Beith's) "The First Hundred Thousand," the following sentences are quoted:

"What strikes a reader who knows nothing of war is the bright amateurishness of it all. In a way one admires this tremendously. Soulful talks would be trying. . . . But war, after all, is war. It is not a game or a sport. And Captain Beith's spirit is the spirit of the British public school with a strong suggestion of Punch. . . . But to go from the playground to the battlefield in the very spirit of the playground suggests a lack of imagination. And this lack of imagination sticks out all over this volume. . . . However one may feel about the Germans, one may be sure they do not take their work in this spirit. . . . Perhaps the class humor with which the recruits are described . . . has something to do with a sense that Captain Beith has not quite clinched with the difficult task of describing the war. . . . That he and his regiment were gloriously gallant one is warmly conscious. If one is disappointed it is mainly because their deeper emotions are not presented with success. One does not doubt for a second the sportsmanlike attitude of these men. One only doubts their willingness to accept the psychic as well as the physical clash of the war . . . But pleasant though Captain Beith's narrative is, it does not convey a fine total sense of his adventure, his army and his empire. It has for a grave event a too-familiar imperturbability, an air of preserving style at the expense of sincere response . . ."

§ 10

Reviews of this kind are fashionable to-day. Their manner of courteous superiority sometimes makes the reader exclaim: "Here, at last, is real criticism!" Yet the reviewer's phrase: "an air of preserving style at the expense of sincere response," is applicable to his own work. You cannot escape the feeling that this polite fault-finding is done for the sake of fault-finding, and that if Captain Beith had indulged in the least emotionalism this reviewer would have denounced him more cuttingly than he does for its lack. In other words, his mental attitude is as if he had said: "Here is a well-liked, straightforward, and occasionally humorous narrative, — I must delicately, very delicately, point out its defects. I can find these defects without difficulty by imagining what my mental attitude would have been in similar circumstances, and regretting that the author's experiences were different."

Surely, to lament because Captain Beith's Scotch soldiers lacked the "willingness to accept the psychic . . . clash of the war" is rather absurd and suggests the dilettante critic.

§ 11

What does the general reader think of book-reviews? How much does he use them, and what importance does he attach to them? If you have not already discovered, you can easily find out that only a small percentage of the public read book-reviews at all. Should you inquire among fairly well-informed people, those who are moderately interested in books and reading, I think you will be astonished to learn how many of them not only never read a book-review, but do not even know the names of such publications as The Athenaeum, The Nation, and The Dial. The average person who reads a few books, reads little or nothing about them except what he sees in the advertisements. If a review is quoted in an advertisement it may catch his eye. Forty reviewers may have condemned the book, three may have said one or two good words for it in the course of an otherwise unfavorable notice. The publisher naturally quotes the two or three favorable lines from the three merciful critics, combines these as an advertisement, and the person who goes no farther than that gets the impression that the new book is entirely praiseworthy.

What do publishers think of book-reviews? It is said that some of them do not much care whether their books are reviewed or not, and that so far as they are concerned would gladly save the cost of the hundred or two hundred copies which are sent to the literary editors. It is hard, however, to break away from old custom, and, moreover, the publisher well knows that it tickles the author's vanity to read the reviews, and that it may put him in an amiable frame of mind to receive the news of slender sales. The author, at least at the time of the publication of his or her first book, is frankly delighted to receive the reviews, and treasures any kind words which may have been said, even by the most obscure paper.

A book's a book, although there's nothing in't,” seems to be as true to-day as it ever was, although now that there is an author in every family the joy might be expected to have worn off a little. But I do not know. I met a gentleman last winter who, at the age of seventy or over, had written his first book, a volume of reminiscences. He had already had a successful career, not without some marks of distinction in his own profession, but the generally kind and complimentary notices which his book was receiving had reduced him to a state of almost speechless delight. Not infrequently authors who have been pleasantly treated feel called upon to write to the reviewer and thank him, although I believe that Dr. Johnson said that was a foolish thing to do, because if a critic had blamed your book, there was nothing for you to say, while if he praised it and his praise was deserved, he had only performed his duty, and needed no thanks.

The instances in which an author has taken adverse criticism to heart, accepted it as just, and been guided by its advice, are, I should imagine, very rare. Richard Grant Moulton declared that the history of literature was the history of the triumph of authors over critics; and Christopher North, himself a famous critic, declared, “I care not one single curse for all the criticism that was ever canted or decanted.” Sir Arthur Conan Doyle said that the only kind of literary criticism which amounts to much is that of a boy who, in genuine indignation or enthusiasm, finishes a book with the word “Rubbish!”

or with the word "Bully!" I know of one instance in which an author found in a book-review the adverse opinions with which he himself had come to regard his own work. He was interested enough to inquire the name of the writer of the review and to send him a letter, substantially as follows:

"My dear Sir: Somewhat recently a clipping from the — of December 20th was sent me. It interested me very much, made me mad (with myself) and did me much good. I have learned that you are the author of this criticism and wish to thank you for pitching into me. Your compliments on my earlier book, of course, made me blush, but the direction of your criticism on the latter was right in line with what I have been feeling for years, and you gave me the fillip necessary to decide me to call a halt on books of the kind I have been making recently and endeavor to go back to the thing I like best. It will interest you, I hope, to know that I am going to bring out, next fall, a book in the manner of my original venture."

Moreover, the author kept his word, and the book duly appeared. Such instances as this are probably rather rare and form a pleasant contrast to what is a more frequent experience of book-reviewers, — to have an author pass over forty lines of praise, remember only one or two lines of censure, and write a petulant complaint to the reviewer or the editor.

There are, or used to be, some warm-hearted persons sitting in editorial chairs who believe that it is the function of the reviewer always to say something pleasant and encouraging to every author. If we had to choose between this method and the merciless flaying which used to delight the writers for the Quarterly Review, there can be no doubt that the humane method is best. There is a story told, — it is my impression by Laurence Hutton, but I have been unable to find the exact reference, — concerning William Cullen Bryant. Mr. Bryant always desired, according to this story, to say something cordial about every book, no matter how bad it might be. He gave Mr. Hutton a volume of poems to review, and told him it was apparently written by some poor woman who was aspiring to be a poet. "You can find something good in it," he said. Mr. Hutton hunted through the book and brought it back to Mr. Bryant, challenging him to find one line in the whole volume which was not execrable. Bryant hunted, and had to admit that no good word could be spoken for it. "But perhaps," said he, "you can praise the cover," and he turned the book over and looked at the cover. "No," he continued, "it is an affront to taste; but here, the cover is put on well; you can say that." And so the book notice appeared, giving the author's name and the title of the volume, followed by the single comment, "The cover is well put on."

§ 14

Book annotation has been authoritatively discussed in the Library Journal by Mrs. Fairchild and by Mr. George Iles. The annotations which it is urged should be put on the catalogue cards, or printed under the entry of the book in a library bulletin, furnish an important and interesting subject for the librarian to investigate. The more one tries to write satisfactory annotations, to boil down into almost the space of a telegram the contents of a book, the more difficult he discovers it to be. In controversial subjects it is useful to say in the annotation which side of the controversy the author takes, provided he is a partisan. In general, it seems to me that the annotation should tend to recommend the book to the reader's notice. When a library prints the title of a book in its bulletin it means that the library stands behind that book, and that it is worth purchasing and listing. Still more is this true in a selected list, for here the library is choosing certain books from many others of the same class, and recommending them as the best which it owns or can obtain. Then surely, it is no time for the critical note which bears as strongly on the weakness as upon the strength of the book. The writer of a book annotation sometimes forgets that he is not to display his ability to analyze, but rather to indicate the book's usefulness, or worth.

Some important examples of annotation occur in Baker's "Guide to the Best Fiction." This is a useful and admirable book, but its annotations are sometimes so coldly critical that it is doubtful if anyone would realize that the compiler really intended to describe these books as worthy of attention. Take, for instance, the note on "Vanity Fair." Mr. Baker says that "Vanity Fair" is the author's "most representative novel — a picture of society on a broad canvas, embracing a great variety of characters and interests, the object being to depict mankind with all its faults and meannesses without idealization or romance. There is little set design." All the classes of society "are portrayed in the most lifelike way. Episodes strong in tragedy, dramatic displays of passion, are mingled with pure comedy. Thackeray combines comment with narrative even more intimately than Fielding. To many readers, indeed, his sarcastic dissertations are the chief intellectual delight. Lord Steyne is drawn from the Marquis of Hertford, Mr. Wagg from Theodore Hook, and Wenham from J. W. Croker." Now, this annotation is correct in all essentials, from beginning to end. It could only have been written by a man with a respectable knowledge of Thackeray and generally of the English novel. It shows a genuine critical quality; yet it has about as much enthusiasm in it, about as much warmth, as a dead fish. No one would guess from it that the book under discussion was what many judges would name as the highwater mark of English fiction. I certainly cannot imagine that it would arouse in anyone a strong desire to read the book. Such a note is not necessarily wrong in a volume like Mr. Baker's, but I do believe that in library annotation a little less cool analysis and a little more enthusiasm is desirable. In annotation, as in book reviewing, maudlin enthusiasm, bubbling sentimentality, are surely to be avoided. But that does not mean that we should look at works, which after all are designed to appeal to the imagination and the emotions, entirely in the cold light of the intellect.

In spite of the length of this discussion, it is not my theory that a librarian should read reviews without ceasing. There are other methods of finding out about books. First and foremost, among them, is reading the books themselves, in whole or in part, and forming our own opinions about them; opinions which we should sometimes be willing to maintain in opposition to what the reviewers may say. But there are cases when the reviews are of no avail, because they do not come in time, and still other cases in which it is not necessary to have recourse to reviews at all. No librarian would wait, when Mr. Howells published a book, to find out whether the book-reviewers say that it is of a sufficiently high literary standard to warrant its admission to a public library. We are sure about that in advance. Nor have we any reason to feel uneasiness as to whether its ethical tone is high enough. That is true of such a writer as Mr. Howells, and while he is merely one example, it is also true of writers in other fields. If James Bryce published a book on government, or Professor Dewey one on education, we know that we have to do with a book by a competent writer in that field, and for the most part the questions which arise as to its purchase are merely financial. We buy it if we have the money.

In many cases librarians use, and must constantly use, a number of small indications: the author's reputation, if he is already known, the publisher (by no means a sure guide one way or the other, but always to be considered), and the general circumstances attending the publication of the book, — even its physical appearance. Librarians do and must use these clues for many books, and make their decisions without consulting any review at all.

It may be that I have quoted or said some things which will lead you to read or investigate a little in this by-path of literature or journalism. If you are led to examine Mr. Brimley Johnston's "Famous Reviews," or if you can go back to some of the old reviews themselves, I believe that you will find the experience enjoyable. It is important to emphasize the fact that critics, even the most learned and distinguished, have been wrong over and over again in their judgments of contemporary literature; have applauded writers of no importance, and violently condemned or ridiculed men whose works are now the chief glories of our literature. To say this, however, ought not leave a feeling of scorn for book-reviewing and literary criticism. To correct such an impression it is only necessary to look at one of the half dozen best reviews in English to see the number of sensible and useful book notices which are appearing all the time.

I should like to emphasize what I believe to be the fact: — that long reviews of books other than fiction are usually of more importance, and that the shorter reviews of books of imaginative literature, while often interesting and sometimes valuable, may nevertheless be merely expressions of personal opinion on a subject about which people differ as much as they do in their taste in food. There are writers, like Meredith, about whom critics differ sharply. To a man who does not like parsnips there is no use arguing that parsnips are good. One writer of book-reviews enjoys Conrad's novels and another cannot read them. The latter might have condemned his earlier books as unreadable. Now, if he were competent, he would have in mind the esteem in which thousands of discriminating readers hold the author of "Lord Jim," and have respect for their opinions. But he could not, if he were honest, deal fairly in such a case. Perhaps he ought to decline to review Conrad's books, and let them be passed upon by an admirer.

Reading reviews is one of a librarian's duties, and also one of a librarian's pleasures. In this it resembles reading of books and of everything else. "A librarian who reads is lost," — that is one of the bland falsehoods about our work. A librarian who does not read is hardly worth losing, and, moreover, must have very poor fun.

THE MAKING OF A WOOD-ENGRAVING

THE Prints Division of the Library has opened the third in its series of exhibitions illustrating "The Making of Prints." The present exhibition, which is to remain on view to the end of May, 1917, is devoted to "The Making of a Wood-Engraving."

The usual arrangement has been followed. Blocks and tools are shown as a matter of course, — bare blocks, blocks drawn upon or photographed upon, ready for engraving, engraved blocks, transfers, electrotypes. There are also gravers (burins) of various kinds, the pad on which the block rests while it is being engraved, the engraver's magnifying glass and stand, pictures of engravers at work and of hands wielding the gravers, as well as of the wood-cutters of olden times, cutting with a knife on a section of plank. And in the adjoining room are shown the various tools used by the Japanese in the production of their color-prints.

The best possible examples of the art have been chosen for exhibition. The enormous amount of material produced in five centuries in wood-engraving made rigid selection even more necessary than usual. It is therefore a summary review of the art from the beginning to the present day, one which nevertheless covers the ground in its essential features.

From the earliest known wood-engraving with a date, the "St. Christopher" of 1423, the important stages in the development of the art are illustrated, usually by original examples, in a few instances by reproductions. There are shown books printed in Germany and Italy, in the later years of the fifteenth and the earlier years of the sixteenth century, such as the "Nürnberg Chronicle" of 1493, Breydenbach's "Peregrinateo," the "Hypnerotomachia" of Poliphilo, Turrecremata's "Meditations," etc. These all help to illustrate the development that was made in book illustration and the essential fact that the history of wood-engraving is practically the history of book illustration, with all the educational influence which that implies. They also illustrate the fact so aptly put by Lippmann in the statement that in Germany the proper function of book illustration was instruction, and in Italy ornament. And finally they emphasize clearly and unmistakably, the peculiar adaptability of wood-engraving to book illustration, since, like type printing, it represents a relief process, so that pictures and text can be printed at one operation. Just as inevitably does this fact suggest and make clear the essential harmony that exists between book illustration and decoration in line and the lines of the printed type page.

After the earliest cuts come the separate prints, beginning with the early sixteenth century, and including work by Dürer, Cranach, Graf, Altdorfer, and others. Some French "Books of Hours" are also on exhibition. From these prints produced from the wood blocks cut with a knife along the grain we come to the modern work, dating from Bewick, which was produced by engraving with gravers on wood blocks across the grain. The difference, as the exhibition clearly shows, is that in the one case we have the line cut in relief so as to print black on the white ground and in the other the line incised so as to print white on a black ground. The development of this new art of wood-engraving is shown through the early period of the nineteenth century, when forgetful of the nature of their medium the engravers tried to imitate engraving on copper; through that period of book illustration in England, generally known as the period of the '60s, the Doré period in France, the elaborate reproductions of paintings and other works of art, as well as the illustrations of Menzel, Richter and others, in Germany, down to that brilliant culmination in the absolute reproduction of tone which was the result of the activity of what is generally known as the "New School" of wood-engraving in America. In the latter, the matter of tones and tints and gradations is carried to the utmost possibility, even to extremes, in the joy of this new-felt power. But the best work of this school — the work produced as the result of more clarified ideas — will stand as most remarkable examples of interpretation through black and white of painters of different lands and times.

The present-day examples that it was possible to exhibit in the space available will show that the art is not dead by any means. It is being practised in a different way; that is, by artists seeking to express themselves directly on the block as they would on copper in etching, or on the stone in lithography. Strang, Sleigh, Ricketts, Craig, Nicholson, and Moore in England, where L. Pissaro and Verpilleux are also active; Lepère, Rivière, Vallotton and Colin in France; Orlik, Moll, Laage, Klemm and others in Germany and Austria; and Dow, Helen Hyde, Nordfeldt, Ruzicka, Howard McCormick and Allen Lewis in our land have shown in various ways what can be done in wood-engraving while remaining strictly within the limits of the medium. Much of this modern work is in simple open lines and flat tints, the tints often in color.

SCHOOLROOM DECORATION

A LIST OF REFERENCES COMPILED BY RACHEL H. BEALL

The New York Public Library, 1915*

The aim of this list is to help those who are interested in beautifying and decorating schoolrooms. Since appropriate pictures are important factors, a few titles on the study of pictures as applied to school-room decoration are given. No attempt has been made to include general books on picture study, such as: pictures of children, descriptions of famous pictures, biographical sketches of artists, scenes from well-known books, and the use of pictures as supplementary material in classroom work.

In addition to works in the Reference Department of The New York Public Library this list contains titles of some works in the Bryson Library of Teachers College, Pratt Institute Free Library, Brooklyn, Newark Public Library, and the Circulation Department of The New York Public Library. The location of works not in the Reference Department is indicated in italics at the end of the entry.

Fabian Society, London. — Research Department. How to pay for the war: being ideas offered to the chancellor of the exchequer by the Fabian Research Department. Edited by Sidney Webb. London: Fabian Society, 1916. xv, 278 p. 8°. TIF

This is not a scheme for finding money to carry on the war, but to pay off the national debt afterward. The first suggestion is to increase the productivity of the individual by better living conditions and better education. The second is to increase national productivity by better organization, the increase in national wealth to be used in paying off the debt. The particular ways of improving national organization are, the development of the post office, railway and canal transport, nationalisation of the coal supply, a state insurance department, and a revolution in the income tax.

Scherer, James Augustin Brown. Cotton as a world power. A study in the economic interpretation of history. New York: F. A. Stokes Company (cop. 1916), 4 p.l., 452 p. 8°. TAK

Bibliography, p. 426-436.

Cotton would seem a sufficiently prosaic article to the average person, but the author of this book shows how it has been a mighty influence in the world's history, the cause of wars and the means of making war, and one of the principal causes of the transformation of modern England. In America it has been more of a power than in most countries and a large part of the book is devoted to the influence of cotton on American history.

Shaw, Arch Wilkinson. An approach to business problems. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1916. xxvi, 332 p. 8°. TM

Part 1, Problems of production, discusses location and construction of plant, materials, labor and organization. Part 2 is concerned with problems of distribution, creation of a market, salesmanship, and price. Administration problems is the subject of part 3.

The Socialism of today; a source-book of the present position and recent development of the socialist and labor parties in all countries, consisting mainly of original documents, edited by William English Walling, J. — Ports of the United States. Report on terminal facilities, commerce, port charges, and administration at sixty-eight selected ports. By G. M. Jones. Washington: Gov. Prtg. Off., 1916. 431 p., maps, plans. 8°. (Miscellaneous series. no. 33.) Econ. Div.

"This report, which was prepared during the first nine months of 1915, contains detailed information concerning 68 of the leading ports of the country—those which had in the calendar year 1913 a water-borne commerce exceeding 1,000,000 short tons in volume, or $30,000,000 in value.

The subjects covered for each port are character of waterways comprising the port, railroads and steamship lines serving the port, commerce of the port, extent and ownership of water front, character of terminals, type of wharf construction, port administration and port charges.

In the main body of the report the data have been presented by ports rather than by subjects in order to give a complete and connected description of each port. In the summary, on the other hand, the data have been presented by subjects. Broad comparisons between ports are made in the summary, but detailed comparisons may be readily made from the main body of the text, since a uniform method of description is used throughout."—Letter of submittal.

ARCHITECTURE

General works, and books on architecture of special periods and countries.

Bernardy, Amy A. ... L' Istria e la Dalmazia... Bergamo: Istituto italiano d'arti grafiche [1915]. 171 p., 2 pl. illus. 4°. (Collezione di monografie illustrate. Serie 1. Italia artistica. [no.] 79.) MQW

Like the other volumes in this useful collection of "monografie," this book is very fully illustrated.

Chase, George Henry, and others, editors. European architecture; edited by Professors Chase, Pope, and Post, of the Department of Fine Arts, Harvard College. Boston: The University Prints, 1916. xxiv p., 250 pl. 8°. (University prints. Series G.) MQK

A useful collection of 250 reproductions of photographs.

Cram, Ralph Adams. Heart of Europe. New York: C. Scribner's Sons, 1915. xii p., 1 l., 325 p., 32 pl., 1 port. 8°. MQS

Contents: A sanctuary laid waste. The forging of medievalism. Flanders and Brabant. The Spanish Netherlands. The glory of a great art. Amiens and Reims. The burghers and their building. Coal and iron. A tale of three cities. Margaret of Malines. The fifteenth-century painters. Gothic sculpture. The allied arts. Art in the Rhineland. The forest of Arden. Ex tenebris lux.

"Mr. Cram is the highest authority on Gothic art and architecture in the country, and his work, in which he analyzes Europe's ancient glories and its recent losses, is quite final. In addition... the book is brilliantly written."—Public Ledger, Philadelphia.

"To Mr. Cram the heart of Europe is the field of war in the west... The chief charm of the book lies in its character of self-revelation. One reads in every line the sense of loss that the author feels in the destruction of artistic treasures... The book, with its infectious enthusiasm and generous indignation, is... not to be judged as a treatise on medieval art, but the outcry of a genuine lover thereof at the desecration wrought by war."—C. R. Morey.

This fully illustrated volume on architecture and interior decoration in Belgium (Flanders) of other days is of obvious interest.

Jackson, Sir Thomas Graham, bart. Gothic architecture in France, England, and Italy. Cambridge [Eng.]: University Press, 1915. 2 v. diagr., pl., tables. illus. 8°. MQS

"This book," says the New York Times of July 9, 1916, read in connection with the author's earlier volumes on Byzantine and Romanesque architecture, "will give the student a clear idea of the rise, development and rapid decay of mediæval art... Refreshingly free from sentimentalism... After a flowing and superbly lucid account of the history of Gothic... [the author] meets squarely the relation of the art to the present day."

From the Journal of the American Institute of Architects, July, 1916, p. 301-303. "The true way of looking at Gothic art is to regard it not as a definite style bound by certain formulas, for it is infinitely various, but rather as the expression of a certain temper, sentiment and spirit, which inspired the whole method of doing things during the middle ages in sculpture and painting as well as in architecture."

P. B. Wight in Architectural record, Sept., 1916, p. 282-284: Important "to the cause of architectural education at a time when architecture appears to be again in a formative condition."

Connoisseur, April, 1916, p. 227-228: "Both the charm and utility of the work are much heightened by the numerous scholarly original drawings... with which the photographic illustrations are supplemented. By means of these, various features which would only be imperfectly set out by the camera are fully elucidated."

Reviewed also, by Francis Bond, in Journal of the Royal Institute of British Architects, Feb. 5, 1916, p. 113-123.

Highly praised in the Journal of the American Institute of Architects, May, 1915, p. 203.

Deals "with what we would call the commonplaces of our art—things that we pretend to take for granted... such as the consistency of form and honesty in the use of material; the origin of new forms in decorative art; the thing that the artist shall seek in his own period; the idiosyncrasy of art imitation; the potentiality of new design in steel and concrete..."—Journal of the American Institute of Architects, May, 1915, p. 203.

LANDSCAPE GARDENING AND CITY PLANNING

Even the following short list of more recent publications indicates the variety of interest which these subjects offer. One of the titles especially refers to the treatment of water fronts, a matter bound to receive increased attention in this country. Different conditions beget different results, but in various European cities there may at least be found suggestions as to the logical treatment of water fronts, with beauty growing out of fitness.

"A book of this kind... must not be one of fine-spun theory. It must be practical, if it is to be serviceable. It must depend upon... the experience of many cities in many nations, and the thoughts of many practitioners..." — Preface.

The book begins with a quotation to the effect that "Town planning is the art of laying out cities to serve the business requirements, convenience, health and comfort of the public... It is adapting the physical form of the city to the peculiar needs of its parts." Proper consideration of these facts may help to counterbalance a certain tendency to see in city planning mainly an opportunity for large and expensive undertakings in architecture and sculpture. But the aesthetic side of the question is duly emphasized in Mr. Robinson's conclusion: "Behind town planning, writes George Cadbury, jr., in his book on the subject, there are the deepest and most permanent instincts of mankind... the desire for order, for health, and for beauty."
